There stood Kitty behind the garden gate, with a fishing-rod in each hand. A tin box was strapped on one side of her little body and a basket on the other. Burdened with these impediments, she required assistance. Susan had let her out of the house, and Samuel must now open the gate for her. She was pleased to observe that the raw morning had reddened her friend's nose, and she presented her own nose to notice as exhibiting perfect sympathy in this respect. Feeling a misplaced confidence in Mr. Sarrazin's knowledge and experience as an angler, she handed the fishing-rods to him. "My fingers are cold," she said; "you bait the hooks." He looked at his young friend in silent perplexity; she pointed to the tin box. "Plenty of bait there, Samuel; we find maggots do best." Mr. Sarrazin eyed the box with undisguised disgust; and Kitty made an unexpected discovery. "You seem to know nothing about it," she said. And Samuel answered cordially: "Nothing!" In five minutes more he found himself by the side of his young friend—with his hook baited, his line in the water, and strict injunctions to keep an eye on the float.

LOCAL NEWS.

A Comedy Melo-Drama.

The Gorman Comedy Co. will present "Conrad" at the Opera house here Thursday evening, Dec. 16th, with the redoubtable "Dick" Gorman in the title role. The composition of "Conrad" is of familiar material. The rich man, Duncan, has a daughter who is pursued by a couple of villains. The father believes he is in the power of these men and weakens. Conrad, a German servant, is the ready man who has the hand of a friend. It is his right hand which is kept busy knocking down the enemies and shaking the hand of his grateful master. The knocking down commences early, and it is always so hearty and appropriate that it pleases the audience. After the first act the scene is transferred from the banks of the Ohio to Colorado, and there scenes and events become more rugged, but Conrad is always "On Hand" "Just in Time" and helps to right many wrongs. The play is sensational, as a matter of course, but is never tame or dull. It is full of go, excitement and comedy. The San Francisco Call says that Gorman, as a dialect comedian, has but few equals on the American stage. He is far ahead of Gus S. Knight. Little Sadie, a child actress not over 6 years of age, connected with this company, is a remarkable instance of precocious training.

Died in the North-West.

The Calgary Tribune of Dec. 6th says:—"The funeral of the late Geo. A. Shaw, who died on Saturday night, took place this afternoon to the Calgary cemetery. He was ill about eight days, his complaint being brain fever. The deceased was a son of the late Geo. Shaw, who for several years was manager of the Ontario Bank at Peterborough, Ont. He had been in the North-West for about four years, excepting a few months spent in British Columbia. At the time of the rebellion he joined the Albert Rifles and served during the whole of the campaign. Deceased was of an easy, generous nature, and was well esteemed by his friends and acquaintances here. There is an expression of genuine regret and sorrow at his early demise."

The Choral Festival.

The dress rehearsal for the children's choral festival to be given to-night, was held on Saturday night, and the excellent manner in which the choruses were rendered gives promise of the splendid entertainment awaiting the public this evening. It will be one of the finest musical treats ever presented in Peterborough. Let the public turn out en masse and give the little folks a bumper house. The orchestra will be composed of the full band of the Fire Brigade. Admission only twenty-five cents.

Breaking the Ranks.

During the Salvation Army parade on Sunday, near the post-office, a couple of young men in a buggy attempted to drive through the ranks. To prevent the horse from trampling down a young girl, one of the men seized the horse's bridle, when one of the occupants of the vehicle struck him a violent blow over the face with the whip, the thong laying open his cheek, which bled freely. It is said the matter will be discussed in the Police Court.

The Liberal Campaign.

Mr. Stratton, the Liberal candidate, last week held meetings at Young's Point, Selwyn Bridgenorth, Harvey and Montgomery's School house. The meetings were well attended and a lively interest shown in public matters. The prospects of the return of the Liberal candidate in West Peterborough are good.

Police Court.

MONDAY, Dec. 13th.

T. Cavanagh was charged this morning with a third violation of the Scott Act. Several witnesses were examined, but the case was enlarged for a week in order to ensure the attendance of four others who did not appear.

In the Scott Act case against Wm. Kennealy, resumed this morning, a lease of the bar and fixtures from Kennealy to William Campbell, a former bartender, was presented in court. Joseph Currens, committed to gaol last week for larceny, was brought into court to give evidence to prove that liquor was sold on the premises. The magistrate, in giving judgment, stated that there was no doubt liquor had been sold, but the lease had to be taken into account. To his mind it was genuine, and, as it relieved Kennealy from any liability to the charges, he dismissed the case.

The case against Carveth, of Lakefield, was dismissed with costs.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases routed in the system of the patient—that would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use, the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquillizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and gauged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it. w52

AN IDEAL ROW.

The Cause of Miss Huntington's Dismissal From the Boston Company.

PEORIA, Ill., Dec. 11.—And now it is the Boston Ideal Opera Company that is exemplifying the tradition that singers cannot live together in harmony. The Peoria Transcript published to-day what purported to be an interview with Miss Agnes Huntington, attacking Mlle. La Blanche and Mlle. Lelie De Lussan, the prima donnas of the company. The latter fainted on the stage, during the performance this afternoon, it is stated from nervous excitement induced by reading the article. At the close of the performance Manager Forster called the company together and asked them if they sympathized with the attack and they declared they did not. Mr. Forster thereupon dismissed Miss Huntington from the company and announced that he would begin legal proceedings against her, laying damages at $50,000.

A Father's Mistake.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 11.—J. C. Hill, a prominent resident of Edgewood, a wealthy suburb of this city, mistook his daughter for a burglar last night and shot her through the neck, inflicting a dangerous, and it is feared, fatal wound. Mr. Hill made collections yesterday of about $6000, which he took to his home to keep over night. His daughter, who had a toothache, arose early this morning and went down to the library to the fire to warm herself. Her father, hearing the noise, thought burglars had entered the house and fired.

The Laval Election Case.

MONTREAL, Dec. 11.—The Judge to-day postponed the Laval election contestation till Tuesday and, referring to the large number of contestations, said: "In England 1,200 members were returned in two elections within eighteen months and only one petition had been presented for contestation of seat. In Quebec sixty-five members were elected and, I understand, half of them are being contested. This I consider proof of political immorality. It would not be my duty to allow the business of the general community to suffer through the hearing of these electoral cases."

Suicide Near Belleville.

DUBLIN, Dec. 9.—The postoffice authorities are accused of opening letters addressed to Mr. Sullivan, ex-Chairman of the Irish National League of America. It is also alleged that a letter from Mr. Sullivan's wife in Chicago was received here with the seal broken. The officials decline to institute an inquiry unless the envelope in which it is claimed was tampered with is produced.

"NO WORSE THAN OTHERS."

MRS. BLOOD'S OPINION OF THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

More Evidence in the Campbell Divorce Case—Lady Colin's Brother Gives Testimony As To What Could Be Seen Through the Keyhole.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The trial of the Campbell divorce case was resumed to-day. Dr. Hicks testified that Lady Colin had never had a miscarriage.

Frank Miles, an artist, and Neptune Blood both testified that they saw Lady Colin Campbell in London on Sunday, Aug. 13, 1883, the day on which the defence alleges that she was at the Purfleet Hotel with the Duke of Marlborough.

Annie Brown denied the statement made by the man-servant O'Neill, that he once called her attention to strange noises in the dining-room on an occasion when Lady Colin and the Duke of Marlborough were there alone.

Neptune Blood testified that he had since the beginning of the trial examined the door of the dining-room in Cadogan Place through the keyhole of which O'Neill testified he once saw plaintiff and the Duke of Marlborough in a compromising position. The witness said there were flaps over the keyhole on both sides of the door. He looked through but could not see any object on the floor six feet away nor any article in the room clearly enough to swear to its identity.

Mrs. Blood, Lady Colin's mother, testified that the engagement between her daughter and Lord Colin Campbell was made without her knowledge. She denied that she had pressed the marriage. She declared that it was untrue that Lord Colin ever told her anything about his health except that he had said he had had an operation performed. She never would have given her daughter in marriage to a man in such a loathsome condition as Lord Colin was in if she had known of it. The witness swore that Lady Colin was in her (witness') house on Sunday, Aug. 13, 1883. On cross-examination she admitted that she was anxious to break off the marriage between defendant and her daughter because the Campbell family treated her daughter so badly, and added that "it was a wretchedly bad marriage." The witness said she saw no reason why her daughter should not associate with the Duke of Marlborough who, witness declared, was no worse than many others who got off more lightly.

Mr. Russell, counsel for the plaintiff, promised to conclude the case for Lady Colin on Wednesday next.

The judge said he would sit until midnight every day rather than permit the hearing to linger over the holidays.

TO BE TREATED WITH CONTEMPT.

An Irish Judge's Opinion of the "Plan of the Campaign."

DUBLIN, Dec. 13.—Judge Boyd, receiver of the Land Court of Dublin, has announced that he will treat the Irish Land League's "Plan of the Campaign" with contempt. "This court," the Judge declares, "will know how to deal with tenants who pay their rents to trustees instead of to the landlords or legal agents, and it will also know how to deal with the trustees who take the money."

The case of the Government against John Dillon for agitating the "Plan of the Campaign" was called up for hearing again to-day. Counsel for the defence stated that he had withdrawn, Mr Dillon having assumed the task of conducting his own defence. The case was adjourned till to-morrow.

Rev. Dr. McGlynn Suspended.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The World says Rev. Dr. McGlynn has, by order of the Archbishop Corrigan, been suspended from saying mass or exercising any of the functions of a priest, and Rev. Dr. James T. Curran is now acting as rector of St. Stephens. Dr. McGlynn has been under suspension for about two weeks, and nobody can tell when the suspension will terminate. The case will probably come before the Supreme Pontiff on Dr. McGlynn's arrival at Rome, and the Pope's decision will determine whether the Doctor shall again be clothed with priestly powers.

A Temperance Colonel Under a Cloud.

ELMIRA, N.Y., Dec. 13.—Col. Theodore T. Weaver was arrested last night for the forgery of two checks, one on a Watkins bank, the other on the Chemung Canal Bank, signing the name of two business firms of this city. Weaver has had a good deal to do with the anti-saloon movement, the prohibition cause and White Cross Society. He was secretary of the anti-saloon organization in this part of the state, also of the White Cross Society.

Drunk on the Ice.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 13.—The Bogling bark M. D. Cass arrived Friday from Buenos Ayres. The crew tell a terrible story of abuse received from the captain, second mate and boatswain. Edward Sparrow, an Irish sailor, against whom the master and second mate are alleged to have a spite, was knocked down and pounded so severely that he died in consequence, he jumped overboard and was drowned.

WICKEDNESS IN COLLEGES.

WHAT SAM JONES SAYS ABOUT SOME IN TORONTO.

He Speaks of the Other Sam's Jewelry Purchases and Gives an Explanation—How to Deal With Troubles—Home-made and Real.

TORONTO, Dec. 14.—An immense number of people, at 25 and 50c., filled the Metropolitan Church last night to hear Sam Jones lecture. Most of them had heard him preach, and they found his lecturing like his preaching, for, as he said, "Lecturin' is ten times harder than preachin', and it ain't much different after all, is it? I hardly know which is which." On the platform beside Mr. Jones sat Rev. Dr. Potts, Rev. Hugh Johnston, Rev. E. A. Stafford, Rev. Wm. Briggs and W. J. Maxwell, Mr. Jones' musical aide-de-camp. Rev. Dr. Potts announced that Mr. Jones would lecture in the Metropolitan to night on "Character and Characters," and to-morrow night on "Rum and its Ravages." And then he said, 'The Reverend Samuel Porter Jones will now lecture."

Mr. Jones said he would speak of "The Troubles of Life and What to do With Them." Troubles he divided into two kinds, home-made or borrowed, and real. Nine-tenths of our troubles are of the first class and like all home-made things they wear almost forever if they are taken care of. He referred to the worries which women, particularly mothers, are always bringing on themselves, and he gave a couple of good illustrations to show the folly of women anticipating trouble on the slightest pretext. Such a woman is a goose "and there is many a featherless goose in this world and many a male one." Nearly every woman had a "trouble machine," and she was never tired running it with every muscle at work. Some were miserable for fear of danger to their husbands when out of their sight. "I'm so glad" said Mr. Jones, "that I had sense enough to marry a woman who has sense enough to not trouble about me when I'm out of her sight." Men, too, had trouble machines which turned out petty, homemade troubles, and they ran them mostly when they want to bed, by fretting and groaning about financial matters instead of sleeping. "I never carried more trouble to bed with me than I could kick off. Its a poor thing to brood over borrowed troubles and it's awful to look at life that way. Take a cheerful view and look for the bright side. When a man's liver is out of fix he's out of fix all over and he is despondent."

Treating of the real troubles he said they were many enough and hard enough to bear and those who can manage them do well. Real trouble develops one's manhood, and people who never experienced it are unreliable and have no sympathy for the unfortunate or kindness for their fellow men. The happiest are those who have mastered real trouble. "The happiest family I ever saw consisted of Sam Small's wife and children the week after his conversion." This remark seemed to give Mr. Jones a sudden cue, for he said:

I will say right here that there has been an attempt made by men and devils to embroil the character of Sam Small since I have known him. I will say this and I will say that he is loyal to God and man. (Applause.) One newspaper in this city and several in other places have attacked him and tried to ruin him. Why, when his conversion has cost him thousands of dollars of gates, during his drunken debauches he used to sell his wife's jewelry and diamonds and when he returned he thought the next thing he would to present her with others. (Applause.) I am thankful there was one who stood by him when other men treated him as I saw him treated. Some other men treated him as I saw him treated. Some other men treated him as I saw him treated. Some

A TRAP FOR THE UNWARY.

In about eleven days the electors of this county will be called upon to record their approval or disapproval of the Mowat Administration—on Dec. 29th—and if that administration is judged upon its merits, there can be little doubt of the result. Its financial management has been such as to literally disarm criticism. As has before been pointed out, "what private concern could have expended $31,147,637 in fourteen years as the Mowat Administration has done, on a very extensive range of services, without giving any one of a multitude of keen hostile critics a good case for declaring blundering or extravagance to have been shown? Yet the Ontario Government successfully defies all the critics of its financial management. Is there another concern, public or private, in Canada that could throw open its books with impunity to the criticism of skilled financiers stirred on to find fault by the hope to gain distinction and reward? It can be confidently asserted that Ontario's business has been managed as well by elected representatives as—yes, and better—than the business of one concern in 50,000 by its proprietors." Yet, not on its financial record, not on the record of its general administration, do the opponents of the Mowat Administration seek to oppose it. Despairing of exciting hostility by legitimate criticism, the Conservative opposition and organs have raised the hypocritical cry that Protestantism is in danger. For the sake of scoring a party point they do not hesitate to invent the most outrageous improbabilities and impute the most improbable motives to Hon. Mr. Mowat. By perpetually harping upon this one string they hope to be able to alienate enough Liberal electors from their allegiance to give the Tory party in Ontario a chance at the Treasury Benches. But it is a mere party trick. What do the Conservative leaders in this campaign care for Protestant liberties?—all they are struggling for is the success of their party. In the elections of 1883 the Conservatives claimed that Hon. Mr. Mowat was not doing justice to Roman Catholics—that he was favoring Protestants at their expense. Why have they changed their tune and tactics? Simply because they think they can make party capital out of the "No Popery" cry, which they are now raising throughout the Province from one end of it to the other. They point to alleged pro-Catholic legislation that has been passed by the Mowat Government as hostile to Protestantism, yet the Conservative members who are now denouncing it, sat in the house, discussed all these matters and yet had not one word to say against any of it, but in some cases actually voted for it. Why do they oppose it now? Because the Mail on the advice of the leaders of the party decided to raise the religious cry. There was nothing wrong before that; it is all wrong now. No political dodge was ever more transparent, and it is incumbent on every Liberal and Reformer to see that he is not deceived by so transparent a trick. A conscientious Reformer will long hesitate before he throws aside the principles of a life time and joins hands with the party who have fought from time immemorial against the principles every Reformer holds sacred—before he is caught with the electioneering clap-trap which in this contest is made to do duty for argument. Let Liberals beware; the Conservative organs and wirepullers are endeavouring to dupe them and to make tools of them to serve their own ends—to put their own party in power and to establish a Tory government on principles repugnant to every Liberal instinct and tradition. Now is the time for every Reformer to do his best in the interest of the Liberal candidates in these ridings. If they are misled by a bogus cry started for party purposes, they will be simply foregoing chance for their own enslavement. What do the Toronto Mail, Mr. Merdith and Mr. Carnegie care for civil or religious liberty? They have only their own party ends to serve, and they will only laugh in their sleeves at any Liberal who is silly enough to fall into their trap. The devil can cite Scripture or appear as an angel of light to serve his ends.

THE CONSERVATIVE DOCTRINE OF DISCORD.

The Canada Presbyterian thus speaks:—"Referring to the "No Popery howl" that is now being raised for political purposes, Mr. Meredith is reported to have said last week in Cobourg:—

"Why that a cause or a party in a country like this, where we have people of different races and religions, who would raise a cry of that kind, is an enemy not only to his country but to his God. (Applause.)

That is precisely the ground we have taken from the first. The cry is, no doubt, raised in Mr. Meredith's interest, and he may, perhaps, gain something by it on the fifth; but all to whom patriotism is dear will say that the ends who think it cry of this kind is an enemy to his country and to his God. If the enemies of God and the country work in Mr. Meredith without being asked or encouraged to do so, Mr. Meredith is not to blame. Politicians in Mr. Meredith's position are often supported by men and cries that they have no liking for, or sympathy with. Mr. Meredith also repudiates the cry on being half of the party he leads. When the good citizens of Ontario have thoroughly stamped out the cry, as stamp it out they certainly will in a short time, the question will come up Who raised this cry at this time, and for what purpose was it raised at this time? The public will wish to know who these enemies of God and the country are, and why they selected the eve of two general elections as the most suitable time to throw firebrands among neighbors."

The Scripture Readers.

What Prominent Persons Say About the Partisan Attacks Upon Them

Rev. Dr. Caven, Principal of Knox College.

The Minister of Education is attacked from various quarters in regard to the book of "Scripture Readings," for use in the Public schools. This attack seems to me quite groundless, and such as no exigencies of party warfare can justify.

Rev. Dr. Dewart, Editor of Christian Guardian

I do not hesitate to say that, if the other grounds on which it is alleged that Protestantism is in danger in this province, are as weak, as flimsy and as futile as what has been urged about the "Scripture Readings" in the Public Schools, they are not likely to arouse the confidence of candid and intelligent people.

Rev. Dr. Cochrane, Brantford.

Unless we give up our national and non-sectarian system of education, and erect denominational schools, subsidized by Government, where each church may teach its own creed, and put its own interpretation upon Scripture, I see no better way than that which has been adopted. To name such a retrograde movement is to doom it. No reasonable man would for a moment seriously consider such a proposal.

Mr. W. H. C. Kerr, Compiler of the Selections.

I have had neither time nor inclination hitherto to notice the idiotic clap-trap that has been written to the newspapers on this subject by people who ought to know better. I trusted to the obvious malevolence of the writers being the being the best antidote to their words.

Rev. Dr. Nelles, Principal of Victoria University.

If there be, therefore, any blame to be attached to the Government in this transaction, we of the Churches must share it, and in a matter of this particular kind I think we should take the larger share. But the fair inference seems to be that a work so prepared, so examined, and so approved, is not open to any serious objections, nor the use of it in our Public Schools a ground for reasonable complaint, much less a ground for attack upon the Government.

The Boundary Line.

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from otherwise pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's NERVILINE, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but send to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure. 6d50

Free Trade.

The reductions of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eod w61 in PETERBOROUGH, I must bow to the line, let the chips fall where they may. On account of my Extremely Low Prices, some people are very sceptical, and designing dealers will tell them that My Goods are Shoddy, etc. Well, be this as it may, I only ask the public to praise me as they prove me, and in the face of this, I boldly make the assertion, that My Stock for Superiority in Texture and Make, surpasses anything in the County of Peterborough, and is only equalled by one Store in Toronto, and surpassed by none in Canada. I defy any man to contradict this, and prove the assertion, if they do, I will forfeit $1,000. Remember, by One Price and Square Dealing to all, I will ascend the Hill of Fame, and as I do, I assure those who help me, that I never wish to meet them coming down. The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

"You see," the child gravely continued, "you are a clever man, and you have come here to advise mamma. I have got that much out of grandmamma. If I have got nothing else. Don't look at me; look at your float. My papa has gone away, and Syd has left me without even saying good-by, and we have given up our nice old house in Scotland and come to live here. I tell you I don't understand it. If you see your float begin to tremble and then give a little dip down as if it was going to sink, pull your line out of the water: you will most likely find a fish at the end of it. When I ask mamma what all this means she says there is a reason and I am not old enough to understand it, and she looks unhappy and she gives me a kiss, and it ends in that way. You've got a bite; no, you haven't; it's only a nibble; fish are so sly. And grandmamma is worse still. Sometimes she tells me I'm a spoiled child, and sometimes she says well-behaved little girls don't ask questions. That's nonsense—and I think it's hard on me. You look uncomfortable. Is it my fault? I don't want to bother you; I only want to know why Syd has gone away. When I was younger I might have thought the fairies had taken her. Oh, no! that won't do any longer; I'm too old. Now tell me."

Mr. Sarrazin weakly attempted to gain time; he looked at his watch. Kitty looked over his shoulder. "Oh, we needn't be in a hurry; breakfast won't be ready for half an hour yet. Plenty of time to talk of Syd: go on."

Most unwisely (seeing that he had to deal with a clever child, and that child a girl), Mr. Sarrazin tried flat denial as a way out of the difficulty. He said: "I don't know why she has gone away." The next question followed instantly: "Well, then, what do you think about it?" In sheer despair the persecuted friend said the first thing that came into his head.

"I think she has gone to be married."

Kitty was indignant. "Gone to be married, and not tell me!" she exclaimed. "What do you mean by that?"

Mr. Sarrazin's professional experience of women and marriages failed to supply him with an answer. In this difficulty he exerted his imagination, and invented something that no woman ever did yet. "She's waiting," he said, "to see how her marriage succeeds before she tells anybody about it."

This sounded probable to the mind of a child. "I hope she hasn't married a beast," Kitty said, with a serious face and an ominous shake of the head. "When shall I hear from Syd?"

Mr. Sarrazin tried another prevarication—with better results this time. "You will be the first person she writes to, of course." As that excusable lie passed his lips his float began to tremble. Here was a chance of changing the subject. "I've got a fish!" he cried.

Kitty was immediately interested. She threw down her own rod and assisted her ignorant companion. A wretched little fish appeared in the air, wriggling. "It's a roach;" Kitty pronounced. "It's in pain," the merciful lawyer added; "give it to me." Kitty took it off the hook and obeyed. Mr. Sarrazin, with humane gentleness of handling, put it back into the water. "Go, and God bless you," said this excellent man, as the roach disappeared joyfully with a flirt of its tail. Kitty was scandalized. "That's not sport!" she said. "Oh, yes, it is," he answered—"sport to the fish."

They went on with their angling. What embarrassing question would Kitty ask next? Would she want to be told why her father had left her? No; the last image in the child's mind had been the image of Sydney Westerfield. She was still thinking of it when she spoke again.

"I wonder whether you're right about Syd!" she began. "You might be mistaken, mightn't you? I sometimes fancy mamma and Sydney may have had a quarrel. Would you mind asking mamma if that's true?" the affectionate little creature said, anxiously. "You see, I can't help talking of Syd, I'm so fond of her; and I do miss her so dreadfully every now and then; and I'm afraid—oh, dear, dear, I'm afraid I shall never see her again!" She let her rod drop on the pier and put her little hands over her face and burst out crying.

Shocked and distressed, good Mr. Sarrazin kissed her and consoled her, and told another excusable lie. "Try to be comforted, Kitty; I'm sure you will see her again."

His conscience reproached him as he held out that false hope. It could never be! The one unpardonable sin, in the judgment of fallible human creatures like herself, was the sin that Sydney Westerfield had committed. Is there something wrong in human nature, or something wrong in human laws? All that is best and noblest in us feels the influence of love—and the rules of society declare that an accident of position shall decide whether love is a virtue or a crime.

These thoughts were in the lawyer's mind. They troubled and disheartened him; it was a relief rather than an interruption when he felt Kitty's hand on his arm. She had dried her tears, with a child's happy facility in passing from one emotion to another, and was now astonished and interested by a marked change in the weather.

"Look for the lake!" she cried. "You can't see it."

A dense white fog was closing round them. Its stealthy advance over the water had already begun to hide the boat house at the end of the pier from view. The raw cold of the atmosphere made the child shiver. As Mr. Sarrazin took her hand to lead her indoors he turned and looked back at the faint outline of the boat house disappearing in the fog. Kitty wondered. "Do you see anything?" she asked.

He answered that there was nothing to see in the absent tone of a man busy with his own thoughts. They took the garden path which led to the cottage. As they reached the door he roused himself and looked round again in the direction of the invisible lake.

"Was the boat house of any use now," he inquired—"was there a boat in it for instance?" "There was a capital boat, fit to go anywhere." "And a man to manage it?" "To be sure! the gardener was the man; he had been a sailor once, and he knew the lake as well as——" Kitty stopped, at a loss for a comparison. "As well as you know your multiplication table?" said Mr. Sarrazin, dropping his serious question on a sudden. Kitty shook her head. "Much better," she honestly acknowledged.

Opening the breakfast-room door they saw Mrs. Presty making coffee. Kitty at once retired. When she had been fishing her grandmamma inculcated habits of order by dressing her to take the rods to places and to put them away in their cases in the [illegible]. While she was absent Mr. Sarrazin [illegible] thought it over by [illegible] night, and had decided on applying for a divorce.

"I know nothing about my daughter," Mrs. Presty answered, "except that she had a bad night. Thinking, no doubt, over your advice," the old lady added with a mischievous smile.

"Will you kindly inquire if Mrs. Linley has made up her mind yet?" the lawyer ventured to say.

"Isn't that your business?" Mrs. Presty asked slily. "Suppose you write a little note and I will send it up to her room." The worldly wisdom which prompted this suggestion contemplated a possible necessity for calling a domestic council, assembled to consider the course of action which Mrs. Linley would do well to adopt. If the influence of her mother was among the forms of persuasion which might be tried, that wary relative manœuvred to make the lawyer speak first, and to to reserve to herself the advantage of having the last word.

Patient Mr. Sarrazin wrote the note.

He modestly asked for instructions; and he was content to receive them in one word—yes or no. In the event of the answer being yes, he would ask for a few minutes' conversation with Mrs. Linley, at her earliest convenience. That was all.

The reply was returned in a form which left yes to be inferred: "I will receive you as soon as you have finished your breakfast."

CHAPTER XXVII.

Having read Mrs. Linley's answer, Mr. Sarrazin looked out of the breakfast-room window, and saw that the fog had reached the cottage. Before Mrs. Presty could make any remark on the change in the weather, he surprised her by an extraordinary question.

"Is there an upper room here, ma'am, which has a view of the road before your front gate?"

"Yes."

"And can I go into it without disturbing anybody?"

Mrs. Presty said, "Certainly!" with an uplifting of her eyebrows which expressed astonishment not unmixed with suspicion. "Do you want to go up now?" she added, "or will you wait till you have had your breakfast?"

"I want to go up, if you please, before the fog thickens. Oh, Mrs. Presty, I am ashamed to trouble you! Let the servant show me the room."

No. For the first time in her life Mrs. Presty insisted on doing servant's duty. If she had been crippled in both legs her curiosity would have helped her to get up the stairs on her hands. "There!" she said, opening the door of the upper room and placing herself exactly in the middle of it so that she could see all round her: "Will that do for you?"

Mr. Sarrazin went to the window, hid himself behind the curtain, and cautiously peeped out. In half a minute he turned his back on the misty view of the road and said to himself: "Just what I expected."

The Faith Cure.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, pin your fate to the "anointing oil," or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" on the appearance of the first symptoms of consumption, which are a loss of appetite and flesh, general debility, slight, dry, hacking cough, etc. Every day you defer treating your case in a rational manner, makes the disease harder to combat. Send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for Dr. Pierce's Treatise on Consumption.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KIRK.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child ever; and 95 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. Not Correct.

The Toronto Mail yesterday stated that Rev. J. E. Starr, pastor of the Berkely street Methodist church, had accepted an invitation urgently pressed upon him by the Methodists of Victoria, B. C., and that Rev. I. Tovell, of Peterborough, had received and accepted an invitation from Spadina avenue Methodist church. The statement regarding Mr. Starr is correct, but the Mail is mistaken about the acceptance of the call from Spadina avenue church, by Rev. Mr. Tovell. The prospects are that Mr. Tovell will remain in Peterborough another three years.

The Children's Choral Concert.

A Miscellaneous Success—A Crowded House Greets the Musical Youngsters—Beautiful Choruses Fearlessly Rendered—The Audience Delighted—The Concert to be Repeated Next Saturday.

No other occasion ever packed Bradburn's Opera House more closely than the Children's Choral Festival presented there last night, under the excellent leadership of Mr. L. Seward, organist of St. John's Church. The audience on entering the Opera house was greeted with a splendid spectacle. From the stage floor at the proscenium a scale of seats had been extended upward to the rear of the stage and as high as the sky borders. These seats were packed with charmingly attired children, those in the central portion being dressed in white, while those clad in sobcrer hues occupied the sides. The scene was a charming one, resembling a huge bank of flowers or a cascade of infant humanity, which poured over the seats and overflowed the front of the stage on either side in rosy cheeked rivulets of boy and girl life. The orchestra was composed of the full band of the Fire Brigade, which contributed in a very large measure to the perfect carrying out of the programme. The band opened the programme with a finely executed overture, "Pastorella." This was followed by the stirring battle hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers," in which, at Mr. Seward's urgent request, the audience heartily joined—the piping treble of the chorus of four hundred children, blending with the stronger voices of the audience, and the strains of the band interwoven like a silver thread of harmony through all, produced a most delightful effect. The first number, which the children had all to themselves, was the beautiful and stirring Christmas chorus, "Fling Wide the Gates," with the ringing refrain.

"Ring the bells, ring the bells, Ring the merry Christmas bells."

This was a fore-taste of the treat in store for the audience; the chorus was splendidly done, the time, harmony and effect were all that could be desired, and such as no adult chorus on that hall ever excelled. The third number, "Star of the Twilight," duet and chorus, in which the duet was very prettily taken by Misses Ida Hill and J. Wood, was executed with equal excellence. "Sing for Joy on Christmas Morn" seemed to carry the hearers in spirit to the Christmas season. "Who is He?" was the next number, in which Mrs. Seward's sweet soprano asks:

"Who is He in yonder stall,
At whose feet the shepherds fall?"

and a four hundred-fold chorus of childish exultation, like one voice, gives the answer:

"'Tis the Lord, O wondrous story,
'Tis the Lord, the king of glory."

To this charming chorus succeeded in rapid succession, "Come on, Shine on," "Let the Little Ones Rejoice," "Home from the Woodland," and "Hark! the Alpine Hunter's Horn," with cornet accompaniment and solo by Mr. F. W. Miller. This was one of the gems of the evening and well deserved the enthusiastic encore, which was responded to. This closed the first part of the programme and a short interval was had to "allow," as Mr. Seward put it, "the little folks to take a rest." The second part opened with the chorus "'Mid Pleasures and Palaces," capitally sung by the children, in the last stanza of which, at Mr. Seward's urgent request, the people joined with great fervor. The tears that stood in the eyes of some old country persons present, as the rolling echo of the refrain "Home, Sweet Home" filled the hall with a magnificent volume of sound and took them back to the land beyond the seas, showed how their hearts were stirred. This was followed by "Little Acts of Kindness," and the programme was closed with the rattling chorus "Bright and Cheery," descriptive of school life. This selection was full of humor and sparkle, the whistle interlude of the boys was a delightful innovation, and, considering how great was the temptation to spoil the whistle obligato by laughing, they did excellently well, and it was no wonder that the selection was tumultuously encored. A volunteer number not on the programme, was a piece of imitative, in which the hiss of geese, the mew of cats, the bay of dogs, and the quack of ducks produced uproarious merriment, and was a fitting finale to a most delightful evening's entertainment. At the close Mr. Seward gave a brief address, thanking the band for their valuable assistance and appealing to parents to give their boys a chance to develop a musical spirit, which would make them better and employ their evenings in a more profitable manner than many young men employ them in a large town. Mr. Poussette also gave a brief address, and suggested the repetition of the concert, which the audience, on being appealed to, unanimously endorsed. It was therefore announced that the choral festival would be repeated on Saturday afternoon next. The entertainment closed by a grand rendition of "God save the Queen," by audience and children, sung as it is seldom heard.

Much credit is due Mr. Seward for the push and energy he has displayed in successfully arranging and carrying out this concert. He has done it at no little sacrifice of time, and without the least idea of personally profiting by the proceeds. After payment of absolute expenses every cent of the proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of Christmas gifts for the children. On his part the work has been a labour of love, and his self-denying efforts on behalf of the children, and the cause of music, certainly deserve some tangible form of public recognition.

The Battalion.

There was a small attendance at the final drill of the 57th Battalion last night. An order was read to the men prohibiting them from attending any political or party gathering in uniform. This order, which is a very proper recognition of the non-partisan character of our citizen soldiers, no doubt arose from the fact that the battalion band appeared in uniform at the political demonstration on the 2nd inst. The members of companies 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 have been paid off according to the amount of drill performed. The next regular drill will be held Jan. 10th, 1887.

Holiday Railway Arrangements.

The Canadian Pacific Railway, always with the comforts of the travelling public at heart, offer the following very liberal arrangements for Christmas and New Year's holiday travel. Return tickets at single fare between all stations on its line, Dec 25th, 1886, good to return till Dec. 27th, 1886; and on Jan. 1st, 1887, good to return till Jan. 3rd, 1887; and at fare and one-third, Dec. 23rd, 24th and 25th, and Dec. 30th and 31st, 1886, and Jan. 1st, 1887, good to return till Jan. 4th, 1887.

A Smashing Runaway.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Andrew Moffatt was driving his spirited mare along Water street, near St. Paul's Church, when the bit broke in the horse's mouth, startling the animal into running away. Under the circumstances Mr. Moffatt was utterly unable to control the horse, and it ran down Water street unchecked until it reached Hunter street, when it made a "bee line" for the Star Grocery (O'Shea's), smashing in the front door and playing havoc generally with the barrels and boxes of goods at the front of the shop. Marks of the horse's feet were left on the shop several feet from the door. The door was torn off the hinges, the glass pulverized, the covered buggy badly damaged, and the horse severely injured by several cuts in the face and an ugly flesh wound near the thigh, made by the point of the shaft. The animal was placed in the hands of Dr. Stephenson, and will be saved. Taken all round, it was about as expensive a runaway as one would care to meet with. Fortunately Mr. Moffatt was not injured.

St. John's Bazaar.

Promise of a Most Successful Affair.

The ladies of St. John's Church have prepared a delightful surprise for visitors to the bazaar in the Opera house to-day and to-morrow. Tables are stretched around three sides of the room, on which are displayed the various and wondrous products of domestic art, in all the colors of the rainbow, and subservient to every want in the way of useful and fancy articles or work of art. The first table is covered with children's wares and toys, contributed by several little girls of the congregation. It comprises of toys, dolls, wearing apparel, etc. The next table, presided over by Misses Archer, Barlee and Beck, contains a fascinating display of beautiful Xmas cards, and wall and other ornaments; also useful wearing apparel and several gems of art, notably a hand painted table by Mrs. Wright, of Lakefield; a very handsome cushion in arrasene work, by Miss Stennett; a table drape in arrasene and a cushion, by Mrs. Andrew McNeil.

Miss Toker and Mrs. Herbert Hammond supervise the next table, on which is displayed some excellent samples of hand-painting and drawing by Miss Toker, and several beautiful and useful ornaments in rich colors by Mrs. Hammond, Misses Pearse and Halliday, on the next table, have a most charmingly arranged display, among which Miss Pearse's folding chair is worthy of special mention.

Mrs. McDonnell, Miss Clementi and Misses Ferguson and Clementi have the next table, covered with a similar array of elegantly patterned household ornaments and bric-a-brac. On this table a small Christmas tree hung with fancy articles of small dimensions is the most conspicuous figure. All goods are marked at the prices of the cost of the material in plain figures. Meals are served from 12 to 2 o'clock and from 5 to 7 o'clock, at 25c. each. The bazaar will be open to-day and to-morrow. At end of to-morrow evening's bazaar "business," an entertainment, consisting of a tableau, etc., will be given. Further particulars in reference to the other tables and refreshment stands will be given in to-morrow's issue.

Trade Protection.

DEAR SIR,—Though disclaiming any desire for such protection as is generally understood by the public, viz: a craving for a high tariff to shut out competition, yet my business is maintained successfully under the most trying circumstances against unfair competition. As a proof of this, I need only refer to a competition for the length of ten years, during which time the firm competing failed three times in Peterborough, with a winding-up in paying the creditors 10 cents on the dollar.

My complaint is only against dabblers in furs, who, by unfair means in taking orders, convey to the minds of the public that such goods are manufactured here, and, as such, recommended, thereby deceiving the public, as, in fact, such orders are sent to Montreal, Toronto and Kingston to be filled. A tailor or anyone could do likewise, but how could they recommend any article which they do not manufacture and know as little of as the one who buys. Furs, whether raw or manufactured are not understood by the public and this trade is one requiring almost a study of a lifetime and has to be learned practically. In this trade, Germany ranks first in the world, hence the boast of Toronto firms in employing German cutters etc. The saying is, fools never die and by them in general such firms as mentioned thrive. Take for instance the case of Jas. H. Rogers, Furrier of Toronto, where he states in his advertisement in Toronto papers that all men are liars who say that they sell as good Persian Lamb caps etc., for about one-half the price that he sells his at.

Any manufacturer might well say so, as only he it is who understands the difference between a good article and shoddy. I do not think anyone could plume himself for a length of time with the title of doctor, barrister, or any title of the professions, without the proper qualifications; and should trades not have their protection also against impostors calling themselves the leading furriers? Well, if the public chooses to be led by such ones, the rule will hold good that if one blind lead the other both will fall together. I will give the leading furriers raw skins, and if they can dress the same, cut, sew and finish them in a wearable article, personally, in the time of twice twenty-four hours, then I will accord them the title of furriers, and I ask no more of them than I can do myself. There is only one firm in Peterborough which manufactures furs and imports direct by personally selecting his raw material, and he only recommends his own manufactured goods; all other recommendations are a fraud and humbug.

M'GLYNN INCIDENT.

INTERVIEW WITH CARDINAL MANNING ON THE SUBJECT.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The World's London correspondent cables an interview had with Cardinal Manning upon Dr. McGlynn's summons to Rome and the labor movement in America. The Cardinal in reply to questions said that he presumed the summons was more to allow Dr. McGlynn to make an explanation than anything else. In itself it did not imply a condemnation. When reminded that the incident had created an impression that the church was opposed to Henry George, and to the present labor movement, the Cardinal said: "The church is not opposed to them unless they fall into socialism. It has always been the faithful friend of the working people, but there must be a wide distinction made between the socialist and the workingman. I saw a telegram some time ago that Mr. George had said the church had never confirmed the principle of property in land. The reverse is the fact. The whole history of the church shows that it holds and teaches the law of property in land." In regard to Mr. George the Cardinal said that in a personal interview with Mr. George he had understood him to recognize the principle that property is founded on the law of nature and is sanctioned in revelation, but he contended against the intolerable evils which result from an exaggeration of the law of property. The Cardinal added that he was much pleased with Mr. George's quiet earnestness and the reverence with which he spoke of Christ and his teachings. He had not read Mr. George's "Progress and Poverty," but had read his "Social Problems," and had found nothing in those chapters that seemed unsound. It was evident from the general tone of his conversation that the Cardinal was much impressed with Mr. George as a man, and much disposed to take a liberal view of his doctrines of political economy.

Church Dignitaries Decline to Speak.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The World devotes several columns to opinions by Cardinal Gibbons, Bishop Leroy of New Orleans, Archbishop Kendrick of St. Louis, Bishop Ryan of Western New York, Vicar-General Conway of Chicago, Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, Bishop McNierney of Albany, and others, regarding the Father McGlynn episode and the labor movement. All declined to express any opinion as to the merits of Dr. McGlynn's case, but it was evident that they did not look upon him as condemned. The tone of their remarks was sympathetic toward the labor movement so far as it employs legal methods.

THE DILLON CASE.

The Defendant Called Upon to Furnish Bonds for His Good Behavior.

DUBLIN, Dec. 14.—John Dillon appeared for himself to-day in the action brought by the Government against him for agitating in favor of the tenants' plan of campaign. In his address to the court Dillon contended that the language he used in the speech selected as a basis of prosecution was justifiable and that the Crown was straining the law against him.

The Judge declared that the "plan of campaign" was clearly and absolutely illegal. He ordered Mr. Dillon to give a personal bond in the sum of £1000, with two sureties for £500 each for good behavior in the future, within twelve days or go to prison for six months.

Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien, it is announced, will attend a campaign meeting at Kingston on Thursday. Friends advise Mr. Dillon to give bail, continue the rent campaign and force a trial by jury by entrest of securities.

The "Campaign" to be Proclaimed.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The Standard's Dublin correspondent says that owing to the decision in the Dillon case the Government will issue a proclamation declaring the "plan of campaign" an illegal conspiracy.

Prince Ferdinand Wants the Succession.

VIENNA, Dec. 14.—Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, after a long talk with Count Kalnoky, received the Bulgarian deputation to-day. The prince told the deputation that he was willing to accept the Bulgarian throne if the Sobranje elected him and the powers confirmed him. It is reported that negotiations on the subject have been opened at St. Petersburg, and that a deputation is awaiting the Czar's reply.

Trains Obstructed by Strikers.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Dec. 14.—The brakemen on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway to-day joined the freight conductors in their strike for extra pay. At 11.45 to-day the officials made up a freight train to start in charge of Conductor Wise. A new brakeman was requested to quit by the strikers. He refused, and was kicked off by one of them when he got off. When the train was ready to start the engineer refused to move it. The officials say they will make up a train and try to start.

A BOAT IN FLAMES.

BURNING OF THE STEAMER WHITE ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 14.—The elegant steamer J. M. White, running between Vicksburg and New Orleans was burned at an early hour this morning near Baton Rouge, La. Several lives are reported lost but Capt. Muse, who was in command, telegraphs that only one person, the porter of the boat, is known to be lost. The boat and cargo are a total loss. The vessel cost $225,000. The cargo was valued at $80,000. The insurance on the boat was $80,000, and the cargo is doubtless insured.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 14.—A special from New Orleans, alluding to the burning of the steamer White, says: All the rescued people took the Mississippi Valley Railroad train for this city, arriving this noon. Wm. McGreevy, Chief Engineer of the boat, gives a statement of the disaster: About 10.10 o'clock last night while landing at Dr. Ferrett's place above the penitentiary at Point Coupee, at which place the boat was loading cotton seed, a fire broke out amidships. Engineer Barry and Jenny, who were on watch, gave the alarm and the pumps were put to work but without avail, and the watchman gave the alarm by ringing the bell. The fire spread rapidly, and in less than fifteen minutes the boat had burned to the water's edge. There were four kegs of powder in the magazine, and the moment the fire reached them the flames shot up about 100 feet. The sight was the most heartrending ever witnessed, and the shrieking of women and children for help was awful. He saw the Superintendent of the Vidalia Railroad stand aft of the ladies cabin throwing his two little daughters into the water He stood there and burned to death with his wife. There were in the cabin nine lady passengers and about eight men. At New Texas twenty deck-hands were taken on board, and all are supposed to be lost. It is learned that Andrew Pierce, a sailor, and Antonio Rebats, a fireman, are the ones to whom all the credit of saving the survivors is due. Thomas Barry, the second engineer of the steamer, was on duty when the fire broke out in the cotton amidships. For a time he thought he had the fire under control, but it finally gained such headway that they could do nothing with it. He states that the fire then spread so rapidly that the boat in a few minutes was wrapped in flames. He thinks there were ten or a dozen lives lost. Barry reports the loss of Capt. Floyd and the Superintendent of the Vidalia Railway with his wife and daughter, who were passengers. He knows nothing as to number of passengers that were aboard, but thinks there were not very many. He believes there were some women and children on deck. The evidence, however, accumulates that there were many lives lost. Some place the number at fifty.

The J. M. White was making the most successful trip this season. She was owned by the New Orleans and Greenville Transportation Company. Capt. Henry C. Brown, State Engineer, who was a passenger on the White estimates the loss of life at thirty-six. Mr. Brown says: "Washington Lloyd, formerly a clerk on the Will S. Hayes, ran through the cabin calling up the passengers, and nobly lost his life trying to save others. Capt. Muse, the commander of the White, had been ill all day and was in bed when the fire began, but when the first mate was in charge of the steamer. I had about two feet start of the fire and through I ran rapidly forward when I reached the front the fire was within twenty-five feet of me. I did not see a soul in the cabin as I ran through. The cabin was in full blaze at the time and the flames were rapidly eating their way to the hurricane deck."

THE WEIR EXTRADITION CASE.

The Prisoner Further Remanded Until Friday Next.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—Yesterday morning, before Judge Elliot, counsel for the prisoner, Dr. David H. Weir, charged with the murder of Mabel Clark, asked that his trial be postponed until Friday, giving as a reason the interruption the trial would make to the General Sessions now in progress. The last remand was for eight days, which expire this morning at 11 o'clock.

The Crown Attorney, Mr. Hutchinson, said he had no objection to the extension of the remand from Tuesday to Friday, but the Doctor must be brought up on Tuesday, as resident medical testimony had been notified to attend that morning. When the prisoner was brought up on Tuesday there would be no objection to his being again remanded until Friday.

The case for Weir's extradition now turns entirely upon the medical testimony of the Osceola physicians and medical opinion. The law upon which his extradition is expected to be accomplished reads:

"If a man (or woman) has a disease which in all likelihood will terminate his (or her) life in a short time and another gives him (or her) a wound or hurt which hastens his (or her) death, this will constitute murder. To accelerate the death of a person is sufficient."

CUT HIS THROAT WITH A RAZOR.

A Cleveland Man Attempts to Kill His Wife and then Kills Himself.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 14.—This morning August Debdke, a harnessmaker arrived here from the east. His wife Henrietta lives in Holton-street, and thither Debdke repaired. He is an old man, and his wife is gray and dealy. Nine months ago he deserted her and his return to-day was to bring about a reconciliation. The wife refused to listen to him, and leaving the house she started toward the barn. Debdke followed, overtook the fleeing woman and grasping her by the throat began to beat her over the head with a small hammer. She sank to the earth dead, as he, (Debdke) thought. He then drew a razor and after cutting his throat from ear to ear slashed the arteries in his wrists and died. The woman may recover.

The Inter-State Commerce Bill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14.—A morning paper, whose representatives have interviewed the presidents and general managers of the various roads in this city, says that they widely differ in their opinions regarding the new Inter-State Commerce Bill agreed upon by the Senate and House Conference Committees. The eastern managers are outspoken in their opposition to the new law, and declare that its adoption will bring utter ruin upon the railroad interest in this country. They claim that the existing railroad pools are the simplest and most practical means by which unjust discrimination can be prevented. If the proposition to make the charge for the short haul the same as the long prevails, it will revolutionize the traffic of the country, as it would stop competition between the railroads and the water ways.

Another Shock for Gould.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—A St. Louis despatch to the Tribune says: The Gould interests in St. Louis received another shock yesterday by the decision of Judge Brewer in the Federal Court giving the new St. Louis, Kansas City and Colorado Railroad Company permission to enter the city over the Wabash tracks, by the payment of reasonable compensation. As the new line competes with the Missouri Pacific and the western division of the Wabash, Gould and his agents made every effort to shut it out of the city. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Company has been assisting the new company and crippling the Gould system at every turn.

Stanley's Expedition.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—Henry M. Stanley's expedition for the relief of Emir Bey will start in February. The Egyptian Government contributes $50,000 toward the expenses, and a private gentleman has guaranteed the projectors against monetary loss.

GODRAS PASHA'S DOINGS.

The Bulgarians Harassed by a Second Kaulbars.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The Tribune has the following from London: The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says the proceedings of Godhan Pacha, special delegate of the Sultan at Sofia, are beginning to excite lively indignation, as he is resorting to the same methods as General Kaulbars in order to intimidate the Bulgarian Government. He is communicating angry notes from the Porte almost every day, and is assuming a tone of menace that is becoming intolerable. It is perfectly well-known at Constantinople that the candidacy of the Prince of Mingrelia is considered undesirable by all the powers excepting Russia, yet the Grand Vizier is making every effort to compel the Bulgarians to accept him as their ruler.

It is alleged in behalf of the Sultan that he is afraid lest the resistance of the Bulgarians to Russia should bring about Russian intervention and perhaps a conflagration in the Balkan peninsula, which would be fatal to the Turkish Empire; but those who are best informed of affairs at Constantinople declare that the present state of things is the result of the clever diplomacy and far-reaching corruption practised by Russia. The situation is approaching a climax.

Mr. Nagel's Election.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 13.—The report of the scrutineers from Gimli was thirty good and seven rejected votes for Jackson, Liberal, and three for Nagel, Conservative. A leading lawyer of this city says that on a recount he believes the statement of the scrutineers would be accepted. Returning Officer Sibbald says he does not know how the poll stood. He went into a tavern to get a drink, leaving the ballot box at the door, and when he came out the box was cremated. Anyhow the ballot box was burnt, with the ballots. There was no lock on the box and on two sides the rubber had melted off, leaving the charred remains of the ballots plainly seen from the outside.

The Labor Candidate Defeated.

BAMBOOZLING THE WORKINGMEN.

As was pointed out in these columns a few days ago, the Dominion Government has for years been trifling with the legislation in the interests of the working men, especially those employed in factories. In 1883 a measure was promised for the protection of working men and their families, employed in factories, but nothing has since been done. And now the working men who asked for bread have been given a stone, in the shape of a "labor commission." The very composition of this commission shows that the whole thing is a farce and intended only as a blind to secure the votes of the laboring classes at the coming Dominion elections. The members are either Tory wirepullers or pronounced partizans, and no more can be hoped from them than from the notorious commission appointed to investigate the effect of importing cheap Chinese labour in British Columbia. This commission went at its "work" and, instead of getting the opinions of Canadian laborers in British Columbia, got the opinions of the employers of Chinese labour, and, of course, their report justified the action of the Government in importing Chinese to compete with white labor. This is precisely what they were appointed to do, and they did it. Mr. Samuel Peddle, the labor candidate, who is opposing Mr. Meredith in London, has this to say respecting it:

"The commission who went to British Columbia to investigate matters in reference to Chinese immigration are another pretty example. They went in palace cars and took their wives with them. Arrived there they put up at the best hotel and were presented to the best families. They called on the biggest manufacturers, the most extensive employers of labor, and asked them what were their ideas concerning Chinese immigration. (Laughter.) I would have gone to the working classes; the statements of the men who were directly affected by the importation of cheap labor would have been the ideas that would have had weight. I suppose that commission thought they were doing right, but they did not have a practical knowledge of the results consequent upon such immigration."

The present Dominion Government "Labor Commission" is an acknowledgement of the opinion that the Government does not feel sure that the workmen have any rights that can be secured by legislation, and this commission is employed to make sure that they have not—that is after their votes are secured. After the votes of the workingmen are got in the general elections, we shall hear no more of the "Labor Commissions" or of legislation in the interests of the workingmen—till another general election looms up. The Dominion Government, which has kept factory legislation dangling before the working classes since the elections of 1882, will have hard work to fool the workingmen this time.

ONTARIO FINANCES.

When the Conservative organs and stumpers for a moment, consent to drop the religious rancour cry and discuss the finances of its country they have only to say that the expenditure of the country is increasing, though they point to nothing of any account to which they have objected, and so well have the finances been managed that though the Mowat government has in the past fourteen years expended over thirty one millions the larger portion of which has gone to relieve the burdens of the taxpayers, there is still the grand surplus of assets over liabilities of over six million dollars. Besides the current years' expenditure, presents a gratifying showing. Last February Hon. A. M. Ross, Provincial Treasurer in his budget speech, estimated the receipts for the current twelve-month at $2,720,975 and the expenditures on all accounts $3,029,216. But so good has been the management of the provincial treasurer that the returns for the last eleven months show a handsome surplus. The actual expenditure has been $2,503,078, the actual receipts $2,528,746, and the appropriations available for December $526,138. The estimated receipts for December are $310,646, so that the receipts for the year will $2,839,392, or $118,417 better than the estimate of February. The estimated expenditure for December being $192,158, the actual expenditure for the year will be $2,695,236, or $333,980 better than the estimate of February. The surplus of December 1st is therefore $25,688, to which add $310,646 for December receipts, and Mr. Ross has $336,314 to meet an estimated December expenditure of $102,158. Here we have a handsome surplus over current expenses against the deficit of four hundred thousand dollars, which the Conservative candidate assured the electors would be found at the end of the year. Yet the Conservatives want to put out Mowat and install Meredith on the ground that he and his followers allowed legislation to pass without one word of protest, which, now that election is on, they profess to regard as dangerous to the country. They will have to present some better claim to the confidence of the people.

The Nicholls Hospital.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner:

Sir,—As the Nicholls Hospital has been brought prominently before your readers during the last few weeks, I may be permitted to give them an opportunity of correct misconceptions that may have gained occupation of their minds. The first mistake is that the time the hospital has been in operation is generally referred to as one year, but it is really about 18 months since first opened. Making a difference of fifty per cent in all calculations.

A second mistake is, that patients from outside the town have been received into the hospital without pay. That has not been the case. In the one instance reported, the expenses can, and no doubt, will be collected from the party who placed the young man in the hospital.

Another mistake made is the assertion that, persons, a man and his wife, have been supported in the hospital free, at the expense of the town. I am assured that there is no grounds for the statement. No such persons were kept even for a night.

Another statement circulated is that the lady superintendent and servants have been receiving enormous wages. Servants are employed at moderate rates—for instance, a cook at $9 per month, a house servant, $7 per month; a wash-woman costs $4 per week, employed from 4 to 5 days weekly; a nurse, $5 per week; an assistant nurse—a learner—receives $4 per month; a man, who is an absolute necessity round the place, is paid $20 a month, and the lady superintendent has been receiving $25 a month for the first year, but common honesty would say that, for a lady of her natural abilities and acquired fitness, this is not much over one-half what she should be paid. For the coming year she is to receive $400. A very small sum, when her onerous duties are considered. She is a lady admirably fitted by nature and by education for the position. She is kind, courteous, and possessing firmness sufficient to control, wisely, all under her. The trustees are fully satisfied that the management is careful and economical, without a single complaint as to board, care, or treatment of patients. Any charge of extravagance is without foundation, and of stinginess has never been heard of by the trustees. Another mis-statement is that the hospital is kept only for outsiders and the town bears the whole expense. Well, during the period the institution has been open till date, 42 patients from the town have been received, and 18 patients from outside the town, and all from outside the town have to pay their way, or be paid for by some person or municipal council, and I am assured that has been the absolute rule, and $414 09 have been paid by such patients. The total expense of the hospital for nearly 18 months has been $4,787.28. Of this amount about $1,800 has been spent in furnishing, repairs and permanent fixtures, about $1,600 in wages, and about $1,200 on provisions, fuel, light, drugs, medicines, etc., etc. Pay patients have paid $414.09; income from endowment is $900 a year. I am informed that the town paid to the treasurer $3,000, and it will require $500 to $600 more to meet current expenses in full to 31st instant. Cab hire, as reported, for the matron, is absolutely nothing. We have the assurance of the matron that the yearly cost for the future is not likely to be over one-half of the expenses of the first year. As the furniture, linens, bedding and improvements will not require renewal for several years to come—to anything like the same extent required in starting such an institution. As a full report will be published after the annual meeting early in January 1887, I will not occupy any more of your overtaxed space, at present, but merely ask that your readers will possess themselves in patience and await the report of the Board.

Yours truly,
J. STRATTON.

Peterborough, Dec. 14th, 1886.

The Boundary Line.

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from obscure nervous pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's NERVILINE, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but send to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure. 6d50

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eodw41

"I never feel safe to be without Hagyard's Yellow Oil; for sore throats, colds, swolen glands, &c., it has not failed to give relief, and for my children it is so easy to administer." Mrs. Henry Dobbs, Berridale P. O., Ont. 2w48d

The Fifth Ones.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, add your info to the "Association 43," or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" on the appearance of the first symptoms of consumption, which are a loss of appetite and flesh, general debility, slight, dry, hacking cough, etc. Every day you defer treating your case in a rational manner, makes the disease harder to combat. Send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for Dr. Pierce's Treatise on Consumption.

How He Knew.

"Did you carry that prescription to old Mrs. Smith last night?" said the doctor to the office boy. "Yes, sir." "Did she take it?" "Yes, sir." "How do you know?" "Crape on the door this morning."

Vast Solitude.

Weary brain worker—My brain is so tired! I wish I knew of some vast solitude in which no living thing intrudes, to which I might retire for rest. Sympathetic friend—I can show you an old roller skating rink.

Searching for Proof.

There is no trouble in ascertaining from any druggist the true virtue of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for all painful and inflammatory troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, frost bites, burns, bruises, sprains, contracted cords, stiff joints, aches, pains and soreness. 2w48d Ill Temper.

Is more rapidly improved by relief from physical suffering than in any other way. Step on your friend's corn, and the impulse to strike is strongest. Nothing Like It.

Dem' Get Fair Show.

MOTHERS TAKE NOTICE.—West's Cough Syrup contains no opiates, opium or any minerals, and can be given to the youngest and most delicate child with perfect safety. It is an infallible cure for croup and whooping cough. A bottle should always be kept convenient, as it is always a certain cure for coughs, colds, consumption in its early stages, bronchitis, asthma, and all throat and lung troubles. 25c., 50c. and $1 per bottle. THE WONDERFUL CHEAP MAN'S DETERMINATION.

2,000 OVER-COATS AND 2,000 SUITS,

to be Slaughtered before the First of January, 1887. KEEP IT IN MIND, it is worth remembering, for GOUGH never advertises anything he don't do, and in order that he may open out in his new store with an entire new stock, he will offer SUITS and OVER-COATS until then, (January 1st,)

AT PARALYTIC PRICES

I have completed an extraordinary low purchase of One Thousand Overcoats, which will also be opened out this week, and not having room to show them in my present Store, and in order to avoid the rush, and give every person a chance to secure one, I will open them out in the Store

Next to the "Review" Office.

NEVER IN CANADA
has such a chance been offered to secure an Overcoat so cheap, and other Dealers should take advantage of it, as I am going to sell them AWAY BELOW WHOLESALE PRICES.

THIS IS NO HUMBUG,

as on the 1st Jan'y I move into the Store now occupied by Mr. Carton, better known as the Bon Marche, and when I tell you I will, for the next 3 weeks, give you Clothing at Less than Wholesale Prices. I will keep my word, as I kept it when I told you I would throw away 500 Linen Coats from top of the Opera House last Summer. This is and ever will be as it is only once in a life-time that a man can stand such a Sacrifice, as I promise for the next 3 weeks only. People will wonder how I can afford to do it, and so as not to deceive them let me here state that I cannot afford it, for cheap as I buy I certainly will not make money during this grand Removal Sale, but my great motive is a Gigantic Advertisement that will ever afterwards

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Other women might have asked what this mysterious proceeding meant. Mrs. Presty's sense of her own dignity adopted a system of independent discovery. To Mr. Sarrazin's amusement, she imitated him to his face. Advancing to the window, she, too, hid herself behind the curtain, and she, too, peeped out. Still following her model, she next turned her back on the view—and then she became herself again. "Now we have both looked out of the window," she said to the lawyer, in her own intimately impudent way, "suppose we compare our impressions."

This was easily done. They had both seen the same two men, walking backward and forward opposite the front gate of the cottage. Before the advancing fog made it impossible to identify him, Mr. Sarrazin had recognised, in one of the men, his agreeable fellow-traveler on the journey from London. The other man—a stranger—was in all probability an assistant spy obtained in the neighborhood. This discovery suggested serious embarrassment in the future. Mrs. Presty asked what was to be done next. Mr. Sarrazin answered: "Let us have our breakfast."

In another quarter of an hour they were both in Mrs. Linley's room.

Her agitated manner, her reddened eyes, showed that she was still suffering under the emotions of the past night. The moment the lawyer showed himself she crossed the room with hurried steps and took both his hands in her trembling grasp. "You are a good man, you are a kind man," she said to him wildly; "you have my truest respect and regard. Tell me, are you really—really—really sure that the one way in which I can keep my child with me is the way you mentioned last night?"

Mr. Sarrazin led her gently back to her chair.

The sad change in her startled and distressed him. Sincerely, solemnly even, he declared that the one alternative before her was the alternative that he had mentioned. He entreated her to control herself. It was useless; she still held him as if she was holding to her last hope.

"Listen to me!" she cried. "There's something more; there's another chance for me. I must and will know what you think of it."

"Wait a little. Pray wait a little!"

"No! not a moment. Is there any hope in appealing to the lawyer whom Mr. Linley has employed? Let me go back with you to London. I will persuade him to exert his influence—I will go down on my knees to him—I will never leave him until I have won him over to my side—I will take Kitty with me; he shall see us both, and pity us, and help us!"

"Hopeless. Quite hopeless, Mrs. Linley."

"Oh, don't say that!"

"My dear lady, my poor dear lady, I must say it. The man you are talking of is the last man in the world to be influenced as you suppose. He is notoriously a lawyer and nothing but a lawyer. If you tried to move him to pity you he would say: 'Madam, I am doing my duty to my client'; and he would ring his bell and have you shown out. Yes, even if he saw you crushed and crying at his feet."

Mrs. Presty interfered for the first time.

"In your place, Catherine," she said, "I would put my foot down on that man and crush him. Consent to the divorce and you may do it."

Mrs. Linley lay prostrate in her chair. The excitement which had sustained her thus far seemed to have sunk with the sinking of her last hope. Pale, exhausted, yielding to hard necessity, she looked up when her mother said: "Consent to the divorce," and answered: "I have consented."

"And trust me," Mr. Sarrazin said fervently, "to see that justice is done, and to protect you in the meanwhile."

Mrs. Presty added her tribute of consolation.

"After all," she asked, "what is there to justify you in the contempt of Mr. Linley? You won't hear what people say about it—for we see no society now. And, as for the newspapers, keep them out of the house."

Mrs. Linley answered with a momentary revival of energy.

"It is not the fear of exposure that has tortured me," she said. "When I was left in the solitude of the night my heart turned to Kitty; I felt that any sacrifice of myself might be endured for her sake. It's the remembrance of my marriage, Mr. Sarrazin, that is the terrible trial to me. Those whom God has joined together let no man put asunder. Is there nothing to terrify me in setting that solemn command at defiance? I do it—oh, I do it, in consenting to the divorce! I renounce the vows which I bound myself to respect in the presence of God; I profane the remembrance of eight happy years, hallowed by true love. Ah, you needn't remind me of what my husband has done. I don't forget how cruelly he has wronged me; I don't forget that his own act has cast me from him. But whose act destroys our marriage? Mine! mine! Forgive me, mamma; forgive me, my kind friend—the horror that I have of myself forces its way to my lips. No more of it! My child is my one treasure left. What must I do next? What must I sign? What must I sacrifice? Tell me—and it shall be done. I submit! I submit!"

Delicately and mercifully Mr. Sarrazin answered that sad appeal.

All that his knowledge, experience, and resolution could suggest, he addressed to Mrs. Presty. Mrs. Linley could listen or not listen, as her own wishes inclined. In the one case or in the other, her interests would be equally well served. The good lawyer kissed her hand. "Rest, and recover," he whispered. And then he turned to her mother—and became a man of business once more.

"The first thing I shall do, ma'am, is to telegraph to my agent in Edinburgh. He will arrange for the speediest possible hearing of our case in the Court of Sessions. Make your mind easy so far."

Mrs. Presty's mind was by this time equally inaccessible to information and advice. "I want to know what is to be done with those two men who are watching the gate," was all she said in the way of reply.

Mrs. Linley raised her head in alarm.

"Two!" she exclaimed—and looked at Mr. Sarrazin. "You only spoke of one last night."

"And I add another this morning. Rest your poor head, Mrs. Linley; I know how it aches; I know how it burns." He still persisted in speaking to Mrs. Presty. "One of those two men will follow me to the station and see me off on my way to London. The other will walk after you, or your daughter, or the maid, or any other person who may try to get away into hiding with Kitty. And they are both keeping close to the gate, in the fear of losing sight of us in the fog."

"I wish we lived in the middle ages!" said Mrs. Presty.

The first day and evening of the bazaar, under the auspices of the ladies of St. John's Church, gives promise of a successful issue of the enterprise. The patronage met with so far has been encouraging, but there is still a good supply of excellent fancy goods, useful articles, bric-a-brac, art work left, which will disappear pretty thoroughly. Refreshments will be served this evening from 5 to 7 p.m., and an entertainment, consisting of tableaux, etc., will be given.

On Tuesday Mr. John Hull, one of Lakefield's most solid citizens, joined the benedictine ranks. He was united in marriage to Miss Jane Cullis, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Cullis. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's mother, Walton street, Port Hope, by Rev. Thomas R. Hull, father of the groom. Miss Alma Cullis, niece of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Dr. Fraser, of Lakefield, assisted the groom. The newly wedded pair proceeded to their home in Lakefield. The EXAMINER has great pleasure in joining Mr. Hull's many friends in the hearty congratulations suggested by the occasion, and the good wishes for happiness that follow Mr. and Mrs. Hall in their new relation.

SONS OF ENGLAND SUPPER.

The Hearts of Oak Hold High Festival.

A Splendid Spread at Snowden's—Names of the Guests—The Toasts, Songs and Speeches.

Last evening the members of the Lansdowne Lodge of Sons of England celebrated their anniversary as a society by a supper at Snowden's hotel. In 1862 the Lodge was organized here with a membership of twenty-five, Mr. A. G. Compaigne being the first president. Now the membership is 140, and the Lodge has splendid rooms over Long's lower confectionery store. Mr. Wm. Brandrette is now worthy president, and the Society is in a most flourishing condition.

The spread was laid in the dining room of Snowden's hotel, which was finely decorated with Union Jacks and hangings of red, white and blue bunting. W. President Brandrette occupied the chair, and Bro. T. Gunn, past president, the vice chair, while the following gentlemen surrounded the festive board:—Dr. Pigeon, J. J. Turner, W. S. Cox, W. Bowman, J. L. Palmer, W. Roberts, I. Richardson, A. Rutherford, W. Wead, J. Storey, W. Taylor, G. Stevenson, W. Randle, G. H. Hordy, R. Waram, John Fraser, T. Workman, Jas. R. Clayton, A. Cummings, D. D. Galletly, D. Hillier, T. D. M. Crowley, A. Blade, A. Clegg, T. Russell, W. Whittaker, J. Cosch, W. Speesley, R. G. Rogers, T. E. Pratt, F. Brownscombe, S. Kemp, S. Roadhouse, and the reporters of the local press.

After the removal of the cloth, Worthy President Brandette made a few well chosen remarks relative to the present occasion and the benefit intended to be confirred by the different benevolent societies. The Sons of England Benevolent Society was particularly active in affording relief not only to its own members, but to outsiders also. Although they were confined to a particular nationality and were therefore somewhat hindered in the accumulation of members, he was pleased to see the lodge in such good standing to-day. During the three years the lodge has been in Peterborough they had received $1,200 or $1,400, and has paid out for relief $700 or $800. And in this good work they had been aided by the other societies. Bro. Brandette then proposed "The Queen."

Mr. A. Clegg in responding stated that he had been requested to read the following resolution:—

Resolved,—That we as British subjects and especially as Sons of England, who meet to celebrate our Aniversary as a society, and to keep alive memories of Old England, and fan into new life the flame of patriotism, take this opportunity of expressing our high esteem and affection for our Beloved Queen, Victoria, The Good, the best Sovereign that ever graced the British throne. And also to express our loyalty and attachment to the British Crown and constitution.

To the toast to "The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal Family," Bro. Turner responded with an excellent song.

"The Army and Navy" elicited an English ditty from Bro. T. Gunn, who was followed by M. Worthy Grand President Clayton. After singing a patriotic song, he made an interesting speech. It was said in these days that the Army and Navy were not as good as in the days of yore, but to his mind a greater amount of moral courage was required in making the midnight march on Tel-El-Kebir in '83 than in making the charge on the morning of Waterloo. The speaker referred to the Fenian raid and North-West rebellion, when the bravery and willingness of our Canadian volunteers had been proven. Englishmen of to-day were as brave and patriotic as their fathers. He closed by singing the "Red, White and Blue."

Bro. Rundle, an old volunteer, responded briefly, giving an interesting experience in connection with the Fenian raid, and testifying to the bravery and loyalty of the late Col. Williams.

Bro. Brandrette made a few remarks upon the deserved recognition of Scotch and Irish soldiers in this connection. The men in petticoats were always terrors in war and were also good singers as a rule. He therefore called upon Bro. Galletly for a song.

The "Battle of the Baltic," by Mr. Galletly was loudly applauded.

Mr. Crowley, representing the Irishmen, said it was a well known fact that Irishmen were always side by side with the Scotch and English when hard blows were being dealt.

Most Worthy Grand President Clayton gave a few facts concerning the actions of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge since the meeting in February. In that time they had opened up four new lodges — at London, Bracebridge, Montreal and Uxbridge — and would likely open one in Dundas and one in the north townships before long. They had also joined the Foresters in petitioning the Government to pass an act appointing actuaries, so that each benevolent society would be able to show the people that they were on a sound financial basis, were sanctioned by the Government, and were worthy of trust. They were also moving to have the Sons of England Society amalgamated with St. George's Society in the United States. Each lodge was to have sent to them a plan of affiliation, so that any brother of Peterborough going to the States will enjoy all the privileges and benefits of the St. George's Society in that place. In speaking of the beneficiary of the Sons of England, he said it was cheaper than any other, and for various reasons. Their Grand Secretary and secretaries of the subordinate lodges gave their services free. The death claims were paid quicker than by any other society, to prove which he cited several cases. It was twelve years ago since this society was first started in Canada, by six men in Toronto, and look at it to-day. If there was anything on earth God seemed to favor, it was the Sons of England Society, which had for its highest aim the aid and assistance to fellow countrymen, widows and orphans. He hoped the different societies would unite in the good work.

After a song from Bro. Whittaker, "Our Sister Societies" was responded to briefly by Bro. Cox, for Court Little John, C.O.F., and Bro. Fraser, representing both the Foresters and Oddfellows.

Bro. Workman, on behalf of Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows, said the order he represented was founded on the principle of universal brotherhood to man.

Bro. Clegg, a representative of Peterborough Lodge of United Workmen, said the aim of the Workmen and Sons of England were the same, namely, to lift up the fallen and help the distressed, though their modes of working were different.

Bro. Galletly, representing St. Andrew's Society, united heartily in the wish that the two benevolent societies would be more firmly united in the bonds of brotherhood than ever. He concluded with a Scotch song.

Bro. Crowley, for the Orange Lodge, said he thought all men should be Orangemen, for the reason that King William had done so much for all of them. The chief tenet of the Orange Order was the preservation of the British Empire.

Bro. Dr. Pigeon thought both the United Workmen and the Sons of England were working on the wrong principle. The had no reserve funds as other lodges had. Now was the time, when the calls were low and unfrequent, to levy a special rate for a reserve fund, which would be found useful and necessary in years to come. He closed with a nicely rendered comic recitation.

To the toast "Civic Institutions," Mayor Stevenson replied for the corporation. He had been a long time connected with municipal matters, and had the interests of the town at heart. Unfortunately the present council was not in good grace, but he could promise them that if a good council were returned next year the taxes would not be over 12 mills on the $. But as it was, though the taxes were high, a surplus was in the treasury, and though the town had a few debts, there were assets ready to meet them the moment they became due.

Shot in a Railway Car.

ODDENSBURG, N.Y., Dec. 14.—James Graham of Chatham Village, N.Y., and an unknown man left here this morning on the Utica and Black River Railway, and when a short distance from this city they had a quarrel over some money. The stranger drew a revolver and shot Graham in the neck. The ball passed downward into his chest. The doctor is unable to find it and cannot tell whether the wound is fatal or not. The party doing the shooting claims to be in the employ of a Montreal firm, but refuses to give his name. He was promptly arrested and will have an examination at once. They are said to have been under the influence of liquor.

A Son's Unpardonable Offence.

PITTSON, Pa., Dec. 14.—Robert Bousenick, an American-born son of a Hungarian in good circumstances, had been one of many suitors for the hand of Lena Malkie, daughter of a rich Hungarian. Last night when Bousenick visited the young lady she told him she was going to marry another man. Robert went home and told his father. The latter got into a passion and said his son ought to be ashamed to let the other fellow cut him out. Pulling a revolver he shot his son dead.

More Rioting in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 14.—A crowd of roughs and strikers attacked a Sutter-street car driver and conductor with stones yesterday afternoon. Some one on the car fired into the crowd, and twenty-five shots were exchanged, causing a general stampede. One unknown man was mortally wounded. Several suspected men have been arrested, but it is not known definitely who fired the fatal shot. All the cars on both Geary and Sutter-street roads were withdrawn.

The Boers Still Troublesome.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—A despatch from Mandalay says three British soldiers have been killed and six wounded in an attack upon a Dacoit village.

WHY

Will people pay rent when houses and lots can be purchased on such easy terms as are offered by the undersigned. Come and inspect our work and see for yourselves how we can assist you to your homes. Our chief aim and study is to build substantial, warm, front and dainty priced houses. I am offering good building lots, and will build solid brick houses, nine-inch walls, stumped and in bed, two stories, for less money than you can buy frame or roughcast buildings.

We cordially invite those who anticipate renting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I've sold gives first-class satisfaction, and I am determined that every house I build shall be a standing testimony to honest building. THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1886.

THE DUKE'S DENIAL.

HE WAS NEVER GUILTY OF IMPROPRIETY WITH LADY CAMPBELL.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—In the hearing of the Campbell divorce case to-day several witnesses testified that Lady Colin taught factory girls and engaged in mission work among the poor, and that her engagements of this kind kept her employed several times a week from 6 to 10 o'clock in the evening. Lady Miles produced a book to show that the plaintiff and the Duke of Marlborough occupied rooms in opposite ends of the house at Leigh Court, and not adjoining, as witnesses for the defence had intimated in their testimony. Two gate-keepers at Queen Anne's gate, where the Duke of Marlborough lives when in London, testified that they never saw Lady Colin visit the Duke's house there. An architect swore he was unable to see anything through the keyhole in the dining-room door in Cadogan Palace. It was decided to have the jury visit and inspect the keyhole and the dining-room. The case for Lady Colin Campbell was then closed.

The Duke of Marlborough, co-respondent, testified that he never was guilty of adultery or any impropriety with Lady Colin Campbell. Continuing, the Duke of Marlborough said he never made any appointments to meet Lady Colin. He had received from her a few ordinary letters about books. Lady Colin asked the witness not to call any more upon her, as Lord Colin disliked to have her receive male visitors. Witness remarked that it was very absurd, and never called again at Cadogan Place. Witness did not know where Lady Colin's room at Leigh Court was, and never went to her bedroom. He never, as was testified, had been on the Paddington Station platform with her, and never was with her at Purfleet.

Upon cross examination the Duke said the woman with whom he was at Purfleet was Mrs. Perry, a woman of the town, and that they registered and remained at Purfleet as Mr. and Mrs. Terry. Witness declined to name openly the lady seen calling upon him at Queen Anne's gate, and whom the servants had testified they believed was the plaintiff.

He, however, wrote her name on a bit of paper and handed it to the judge and counsel for both sides.

Chief Shaw, another co-respondent, took the stand and testified that he had known Lady Colin's family for many years. His daughter was one of Lady Colin's bridesmaids. His wife always called upon Lord and Lady Colin Campbell when they were in London. The testimony of the man servant, O'Neill, that he saw witness and Lady Colin in a compromising position in the dining room of Cadogan Place, Chief Shaw pronounced an absolute lie. He had never heard a breath of suspicion against Lady Colin's character until her petition for divorce was lodged against Lord Colin. The case was then adjourned.

THE NEW LABOR PARTY.

The Philadelphia Organization in Danger of going to Pieces.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 15.—The indications are that the newly-formed United Labor party in this city will go to pieces before a labor candidate for mayor is nominated for the spring election. The split in the convention held Monday night over the admission of Gorsuch, the anarchist, threatens the most serious results to the party. No less than thirty Germans, each having a considerable following in his local organization, withdrew from the convention.

The German socialistic element in the party claims that the Knights of Labor are endeavoring to mould the party and the platform according to their own wishes without regard to the best interest of labor in general. This is a rock on which political leaders of the other parties predicted the labor movement would go to pieces. In addition to the contentions and wranglings between diverse elements in the new party itself, another difficulty arises in the shape of outside influences upon the ward leaders by politicians of the other parties.

THE NEW IRISH POLICY.

The Government Halting Between Two Sets of Advisers Regarding It.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The development of the Tory coercive policy has been checked by a strong division of opinion within the cabinet. Lord Ashbourne insists upon instant action, based upon the judgment of the Irish judges that the anti-rent campaign is illegal. He favors the adoption of the severest measures, treating the National Leaguers engaged in an alleged conspiracy.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, backed by Lord Randolph Churchill, demands a mild enforcement of the ordinary law. Several members of the Government, outside the Cabinet, supporters of Lord Ashbourne, have advised Lord Salisbury to dismiss Sir Michael Hicks-Beach from the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland and to appoint in his place a man in favor of coercion. BAYARD'S BLUSTER

ANOTHER INTERVIEW WITH HON. GEORGE FOSTER.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—The Tribune has the following from Ottawa: George Foster, Minister of Fisheries, was seen last evening regarding the position taken by Secretary Bayard in his report to the President with reference to Canada not being able, under the existing treaty between the United States and Great Britain, to defend her fisheries. The Minister said he had given the subject careful consideration and was prepared to give the public a statement as to the position of the Dominion authorities. He then said:

"I cannot conceive of a diplomatist of Mr. Bayard's reputation making such a statement as he has made in this respect. Ever since 1845 this colony has enforced like treaties without a voice being raised by any one in opposition. This right is one which is not delegated by Great Britain to Canada in any sense, as it is understood that the commissioned officers of the Dominion have under the law, equal rights and authority in all matters affecting the rights of the colony with those immediately appointed by Her Majesty's Government. The officials of Canada are in fact officials of the Queen, who hold their commission from the Governor-General, Her Majesty's representative. In point of fact and law, the Government is as well able to enforce treaty rights negotiated by Great Britain and any other power, in which Canada has accepted equal station with either high contracting party, by accepting it by act of Parliament, as is Great Britain itself. If there was ever any doubt as to this, it will be settled forever by the recent decisions of the Privy Council, in which the law was held to be that any colonial legislature had the power to amend or modify, in any way it saw fit, an Imperial act so far as it affects that particular colony."

This was borne out by all authorities and generally accepted by all nations. He was sure that the point made by Secretary Bayard as to any want of authority on the part of Canada to enforce the provisions of the treaty of 1818 was not well taken. Being asked how the Government would treat in the future American fishing vessels in case a damage commission was appointed by the United States, he said:

"If there are infractions of the law, as we interpret it, we shall make seizures. We have rights which we propose to protect, and will protect to the best of our knowledge and ability, come what may. It is, of course, better that we should live in peace with our neighbors to the south, but when it comes to a sacrifice of principle in order to live at peace we prefer to take the consequence of maintaining our just rights, be the consequences what they may. I regard the position taken from the beginning by the United States in the fishery matter as one inimical to the best interests of the two countries."

There had been lots of brag and bluster; but at an early day he looked to see sound common sense prevail. There was no occasion for the fiery utterances of such men as Senator Frye. If American fishermen wish to take the chances of coming into Canadian waters for the purpose of stealing the fish therein, they must not complain if they are caught and treated like ordinary offenders against the criminal code of Canada. Being an American is no protection, neither is it a valid defence from crime committed against the laws of the country.

Justice Butt will sum up the case on Monday.

THE BULGARIAN SITUATION.

Gadban Effendi's Game at Sofia Put an End to by His Recall.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 15.—The Ambassadors of five of the Powers recently informed the Porte that Gadban Effendi, Special Turkish Envoy to Bulgaria, has been playing a double game at Sofia.

Yesterday Von Calice, De Montefello and Corti, Austrian, French and Italian Ambassadors, told Said Pasha, Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs, that notwithstanding the Porte's circular recommending the Bulgarians to accept Prince Nicholas of Mingrelia as a candidate for the Bulgarian throne, Gadbag Effendi had expressed in Sofia his personal opinion that Bulgaria would "do better to wait until the re-election of Prince Alexander." It is reported that the Turkish Ministry, in view of these representations, and after discussion of them, has sent to the Sultan's palace a proposal for the dismissal of Gadban Effendi from the diplomatic service as soon as he returns to Constantinople, whither he is already on his way.

Charges Against a Customs Officer.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—The Tribune's Washington despatch says: W. H. Osborn, a special agent of the Treasury, who was sent to England and Germany last summer to inquire into the matter of undervaluations has made a report which deals with the passage of fraudulently-undervalued and classified merchandise through the public stores at New York, and presents not only charges against prominent cutlery importers in New York, but makes serious accusations against Appraiser McMullen. Osborn accuses the appraiser of being closely connected with a number of houses concerned in under-valuations, of impeding all efforts at investigation, and of disregarding reports sent to him for his personal inquiry.

The Boston Election.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—In speaking of the election in Boston last night Henry George said: "The result does not surprise me, although I hoped for a somewhat better vote. No one expected any such demonstration as was made here in New York, for McNeill went into the fight hurriedly, and there was almost no organization whatever. His most sanguine supporters did not for a minute dream of the possibility of his election, and under such circumstances no one can poll more than a small part of what is his real strength. McNeill himself and his committeemen did not expect more than from 3000 to 5000 votes. The brief campaign has done good by stimulating thought and preparing the way for future action."

Death From Fright.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 14.—Steve Bryant, aged 123, died from fright at the continued earthquake shocks at Beaufort, S.C., yesterday. Bryant was in Augusta when Washington passed through this city in 1791, and waited on the table at which the Father of his Country was feasted. The negro had counted the shocks since August 31, and predicted that the hundredth would be the summons for Judgment Day. Beaufort experienced her ninety-ninth yesterday, and the old man could not stand the suspense of the expected one hundredth, and died in paroxysms of fright.

Prince Ferdinand's Candidacy.

VIENNA, Dec. 15.—Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg to-day had an interview with Emperor Francis Joseph, and conferred with Count Kalnoky about the prince's proposed candidacy for the Bulgarian throne. Prince Lobanoff, the Russian ambassador to Austria, is awaiting a telegram from St. Petersburg on the subject of Prince Ferdinand's candidacy.

STOCK SALES AT WOODSTOCK.

The Horses of John Forbes Sold—Fat Stock Show—Sale of Short Horns.

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 15.—This was a busy day for the county town of Oxford, the fat stock show, the sale of the Forbes mare horses and of John Hart's short horns all taking place on the same afternoon.

At the fat stock show Messrs. Donaldson and Hall were chiefly successful.

The Forbes sale realized as much as good judges expected. The trotter, Tom Ralph, was bought by Mr. Wright, an American friend of the deceased owner, for $475. Mr. John Scott of Galt bought Maumee and her colt by Strathbo for $240 and $205 respectively. The three-year-old Oliver went to Mr. Wright for $510 and Harry Cooper was knocked down to Allie Gates, acting for Mr. J. D. Matheson of Toronto, at $260. Bonnie Bird created quite a sensation on being brought into the ring. The old Queen's plater was started by Mr. Cassatt's commissioner at $400; Mr. Hodgins of London bid $500; she finally fell to the nod of Mr. Hendrie of Hamilton for $600. Her foal had been killed by an accident during the summer. Galvantress and foal brought $210. Bonnie Duke went to Mr. Robert Reed of Toronto for $300 who was assured that he now had the next Queen's plater in his stable. Woodstock was bought by Mr. Kilgour of Toronto for a saddle horse at $140. Georgie Forbes paid $200 for Bonnie Vic's foal, Bonnie Vic and Fanny Wiser having been withdrawn from the sale at the last moment by their real owners who live in Toronto.

Mr. Hart's shorthorns had not been put in extra selling condition and failed to realize high prices. Messrs. Cowan of Galt, Pattison and Lake were the principal bidders.

The town was of course filled with strangers, and notwithstanding the Scott Act, all the taverns did a roaring business in hot and fuming drinks.

A CROOKED CONGRESSMAN.

He Raised Money by False Pretenses and Fled to Canada.

RALEIGH, N.C., Dec. 15.—There is a great deal of talk here concerning the criminal conduct of Congressman James W. Reid of the Greensborough District. Before the election he was publicly charged with obtaining money from the Wachovia Bank in Winston by issuing an order of Rockingham County, of which he was treasurer, when in fact the order was issued for the purpose of paying a county debt. Afterward this order was issued in smaller orders, to be used in taking up the $6000 order. Reid pledged these small orders as collateral to Mr. Fries, and also got money on them, while the larger order was still held by the bank.

Finally, when the bank demanded the cash, these facts came to light. Reid was hard pressed, but raised the money and paid off both debts. He was violently attacked by John R. Webster, a Democrat, and the publisher of a paper at Reidsville. These transactions could not be explained and Reid was defeated for re-election to Congress.

It is now ascertained that Reid has raised $30,000 on property not worth over $8000, and that he has pledged his salary as Congressman until March 4 to more than one person, and raised money in this way. He obtained ten days' leave and is now reported to have gone to Canada. He belongs to a prominent family, is an eloquent speaker, and at one time no man stood higher in the estimation of the people. He was Deputy Grand Master of Masons. He is married and has several children.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1886.

"SCRIBES, AND HYPOCRITES, PHARISEES."

The scribes of the Conservative press, the hireling hypocrites who Pharisaically pretend to superior sanctity and under the false cry that Protestantism is in danger, raise the cotterian cry for the purpose of gaining political capital, belong to the the same party and receive the support and comfort of the same party leaders, who, at the residence of Sir David Macpherson in June, 1882, were prime movers in the notorious Chestnut Park Conspiracy. The terms of the treaty then made were that Hon. Frank Smith and John O'Donohoe, both Roman Catholics, should be taken into the Cabinet, and that in return for the Orangemen consenting thereto, Sir John Macdonald should secure the passing of the Orange Incorporation Act. Sir John broke his promise to the Orangemen, but since then he has shut the mouths of all the leading Orangemen with gifts of land, timber limits, blind shares in colonization companies, Dominion License Act Commissionerships, etc. The following letter proves the fact of the Treaty

(Letter from Sir John Macdonald to the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ontario.)

"TORONTO, June 5, 1882.—(Private and confidential.) My Dear Lord,—Mr. O'Donohoe will tell you of the tempest that has been raised here in Toronto on account of the supposition that his views are extreme as to the Irish question. This might destroy his future, and it has, therefore, been arranged between the Hon. F. Smith and O'Donohoe that the former is to represent the Irish Catholics in the Cabinet, while O'D. will get a seat in the Senate

"Frank Smith is to make way for O'Donohoe in the Ministry when they think the time is opportune. These two gentlemen are acting in perfect accord, and desire that I should explain to your Lordship the nature of their arrangement, which, of course, must be kept a profound secret, at present. Believe me, my dear Lord, faithfully yours, (Signed), JOHN A. MACDONALD."

AN INTERESTING COMPARISON.

At this time it will doubtless be interesting to the electors, to turn away from the rabid cries of religious rancour which the Mail and other Conservative organs are dinning into their ears, to consider the important question arising out of financial administration as managed by the Dominion and Ontario governments respectively. A few comparative figures will speak with great eloquence. The following little table will be of interest:

LIBERAL RULE.	CONSERVATIVE RULE
Ontario Government:	Dominion Government
Surplus of Assets over Liabilities.	Dominion National Debt.
$6,766,020	$281,000,000.
Ontario surplus over current expenditures for 1885.	Dominion deficit—beyond current expenditures for 1885 6,
$150,000.	$5,563,554.

One is the record of the Mowat Administration and the other of the Dominion Government, which is doing its best to supplant Mr. Mowat and place Mr. Meredith, the pliant tool of Sir John in charge of Ontario's surplus. Do the electors think it will pay to make the change? We do not think they entertain that opinion, and we are content to wait for their answer on Dec. 26th.

ADDING INSULT TO INJURY.

For the past year or more the local Conservative organ has joined issue with the Mail in perpetrating the race and creed discord cry, and has been in sweet accord with the France-phobe organ in denouncing vitifying, abusing, belittling and insulting the French-Canadians. But now that an election is at hand and votes are to be sought for the Conservative candidate in West Peterborough (and in mighty bad need is he of votes just at this present) the local organ pauses a moment in its unrighteous crusade against French-Canadians, to insult them with complimentary words. In its issue of Tuesday, the Review has the brassy effrontery to speak of "our excellent fellow-citizens, the French-Canadians of Peterborough." Yet the Review, the organ of the Conservative candidate, in its issue of October 21st, has this graceful and flattering tribute to "our excellent fellow-citizens, the French-Canadians of Peterborough." The Review said:

"The people of this Province (Ontario) are asked to become the mere serfs of Frenchmen and Cross, who are to have the power of life and death over us without responsibility to the law."

Before the elections, and when votes were not as desperately needed as now, the Conservative candidate could place the French-Canadian citizens of Peterborough on the same level as the savage Cree Indians—untamed heathens, unredeemed pagans, who eat roast dog in their sacrificial feasts. A little over a month ago the French-Canadians were duly [illegible] with the Cree Indians, now the Conservative [illegible] they are almost good enough to be classed with himself and to be spoken of as "our excellent fellow-citizens." Bah! Out on such hypocrisy, such truckling sycophancy.

SOME narrow minded Conservatives are always making a merit of their boast of loyalty, and seem to think they have a monopoly of the article as against Liberals. Yet these braggarts whose loyalty lives largely on their lips, are of that class of Conservatives, who showed their loyalty to the Queen by pelting her representative with very mature eggs and by burning the parliament buildings. To listen to the rant of these persons is very fatiguing. These Conservatives belong to that class which consider that free speech is out of place in a British colony and that it is British fair play to judge and condemn an accused man without giving him a hearing—that inciting to breach of the peace, is an act becoming loyal subjects.

THE Montreal Witness says that Mr. Laurier must have made a deep impression upon the people of Toronto by his speech on the Riel question the other night. There can be no doubt about the success of the meeting in point of numbers and in point of attention paid to the speakers. The Associated Press despatches, which the Conservative papers published without contradiction, made it clear that Mr. Laurier had succeeded in interesting his audience. Now the Mail makes it equally clear that he not only interested his audience, but that he must have produced considerable conviction, if we may judge from the anxiety of the Mail, which has thrown aside other quarrels to deal with Mr. Laurier.'

THE organs of the political ghouls call Messrs. Blake and Laurier "the advocates of rebellion." Seeing that they are opposed to a government which manufactures and deals in rebellion, the title is hardly happily chosen.

THE local Conservative candidate begins to feel his condition desperate—he has taken to publishing his scrap book.

The Next Riding Campaign.

Meeting Held in Elora.

Tuesday evening a large, enthusiastic and thoroughly successful meeting was held in the town hall, Keene, in Mr. Blezard's interest. The hall was packed. Mr. Hastie, of Allandale, occupied the chair. Mr. Blezard opened with a capital address, dealing with the general questions, particularly emphasising the importance of retaining the services of Mr. Mowat to secure to the country the benefits of the timber and minerals in the sixty five million acres of land won for this Province by his splendid fight. Hon. Mr. Pardee followed in an hour and a half speech, dealing with the general questions at issue in the present contest. Mr. John Bertram delivered a capital speech, literally annihilating the flimsy fabric of misrepresentation and fallacy built up by Mr. Carnegie in his recent address in that place. The meeting was overwhelmingly in Mr. Blezard's favor. The campaign is going on splendidly in the East, and Mr. Blezard's prospects of success could not be better.

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

"What would to the use of that, ma'am!"

"Good heavens, Mr. Sarrazin, don't you see? In these grand old days you would have taken a dagger, and the gardener would have taken a dagger, and you would have stolen out and stabbed those two villains as a matter of course. And this is the age of progress! The vilest rogue in existence is a sacred person whose life we are bound to respect. Ah, what good that national law would have done who put his barrels of gunpowder in the right place on the 5th of November! I have always said it, and I stick to it, Guy Fawkes was a great statesman."

In the meanwhile Mrs. Linley was so ruffled and not listening to the expression of her mother's political sentiments. She was intently watching Mr. Sarrazin's face.

"There is danger threatening us," she said; "and you see a way out of it."

To persist in trying to spare her was plainly useless. Mr. Sarrazin answered her directly.

"The danger of legal proceedings to obtain possession of the child," he said, "is more near and more serious than I thought it right to acknowledge while you were in doubt which way to decide. I was careful—too careful, perhaps—not to unduly influence you in a matter of the utmost importance to your future life. But you have made up your mind. I don't scruple now to remind you that an interval of time must pass before the decree for your divorce can be pronounced and the care of the child be legally secured to the mother. The only doubt and the danger are there. If you are not frightened by the prospect of a desperate venture which some women would shrink from, I believe I see a way of baffling the spies."

Mrs. Linley started to her feet. "Say what I am to do," she cried, "and judge for yourself if I am as easily frightened as some women."

The lawyer pointed with a persuasive smile to her empty chair. "If you allow yourself to be excited," he said, "you will frighten me. Please—oh, please, sit down again!"

Mrs. Linley felt the strong will asserting itself in terms of courteous entreaty. She obeyed. Mrs. Presty had never admired the lawyer as she admired him now. "Is that how you manage your wife?" she asked.

Mr. Sarrazin was equal to the occasion, whatever it might be. "In your time, ma'am," he said, "did you reveal the mysteries of conjugal life?" He turned to Mrs. Linley. "I have something to ask first," he resumed, "and then you shall hear what I propose. How many people serve you in this cottage?"

"Three—our landlady, who is housekeeper and cook; our own maid, and the landlady's daughter, who does the housework."

"Any out-of-door servants?"

"Only the gardener."

"Can you trust these people?"

"In what way, Mr. Sarrazin?"

"Can you trust them with a secret which only concerns yourself?"

"Certainly! The maid has been with us for years; no truer woman ever lived. The good old landlady often drinks tea with us. Her daughter is going to be married, and I have given the wedding dress. As for the gardener, let Kitty settle the matter with him, and I answer for the rest. Why are you pointing to the window?"

"Look out and tell me what you see."

"I see the fog."

"And I, Mrs. Linley, have seen the boat-house. While the spies are watching your gate what do you say to crossing the lake under cover of the fog?"

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Winter had come and gone; spring was nearing its end, and London still suffered under the rigid regularity of easterly winds. Although in less than a week summer would begin with the 1st of June, Mr. Sarrazin was glad to find his office warmed by a fire when he arrived to open the letters of the day.

The correspondence in general related exclusively to proceedings connected with the law. Two letters only presented an exception to the general rule. The first was addressed in Mrs. Linley's handwriting and bore the postmark of Hanover. Kitty's mother had not only succeeded in getting to the safe side of the lake—she and her child had crossed the German ocean as well. In one respect her letter was a remarkable composition. Although it was written by a lady, it was short enough to be read in less than a minute:

"My Dear Mr. Sarrazin: I have just time to write by this evening's post. Our excellent courier has satisfied himself that the danger of discovery has passed away. The wretches have been so completely deceived that they are already on their way back to England, to lie in wait for us at Folkestone and Dover. To-morrow morning we leave this charming place—oh, how unwillingly!—for Bremen, to catch the steamer to Hull. You shall hear from me again on our arrival. Gratefully yours,

CATHERINE LINLEY."

Mr. Sarrazin put this letter into a private drawer, and smiled as he turned the key. "Has she made up her mind at last?" he asked himself. "But for the courier, I shouldn't feel sure of her, even now!"

The second letter agreeably surprised him. It announced that the writer had just returned from the United States, it invited him to dinner that evening, and it was signed "Randal Linley." In Mr. Sarrazin's estimation Randal occupied a higher place than his brother. The lawyer had known Mrs. Linley before her marriage, and had been privately inclined to think that she would have done wisely if she had given her hand to the younger brother instead of the elder. His acquaintance with Randal ripened rapidly into friendship. But his relations with Herbert made no advance beyond intimacy; there was a gentleman-like cordiality between them, and nothing more.

At 7 o'clock the two friends sat at a snug little table in the private room of a hotel, with an infinite number of questions to ask of each other, and with nothing to interrupt them but a dinner of such extraordinary merit that it insisted on being noticed, from the first course to the last.

Randal began. "Before we talk of anything else," he said, "tell me about Catherine and the child. Where are they?"

"On their way to England, after a residence in Germany."

"And the old lady?"

"Mrs. Presty has been staying with friends in London."

"What! have they parted company? Has there been a quarrel?"

"Nothing of the sort; a friendly separation, in the strictest sense of the word. Oh, Randal, which are the greatest fools—people who are married, or people who are single?"

"Ask me another. I'm as much puzzled as the pale donkey in 'Midsummer Night's Dream.'"

"So it is; I wasn't paying the proper attention to it. But I am anxious about Catherine. Why did she go abroad?"

"Haven't you heard from her?"

"Not for six months or more. I innocently vexed her by writing a little too hopefully about Herbert. Mrs. Presty answered my letter, and recommended me not to write again. It isn't like Catherine to bear malice."

"Don't even think such a thing possible!" the lawyer answered, earnestly. "Attribute her silence to the right cause. Terrible anxieties have been weighing on her mind since you went to America."

"Anxieties caused by my brother? Oh, I hope not."

"Caused entirely by your brother—if I must tell the truth. Can't you guess how?"

"Is it the child? You don't mean to tell me that Herbert has taken Kitty away from her mother?"

"While I am her mother's lawyer, my friend, your brother won't do that. Welcome back to England in the first glass of sherry; good wine, but a little too dry for my taste. No, we won't talk of domestic troubles, just yet. You shall hear all about it after dinner. What made you go to America? You haven't been delivering lectures have you?"

"Certainly not. I have been enjoying myself among the most hospitable people in the world. What is there left for me to do but to try change of scene, and go roaming about the world, a restless creature without an object in life?"

"Remember what my life used to be when I was in Scotland—and look at my life now! No Mount Morven; no model farm to look after; no pleasant highland neighbors; I can't go to my brother while he is leading his present life; I have hurt Catherine's feelings; I have lost dear little Kitty: I am not obliged to earn my living (more's the pity); I don't care about politics; I have a pleasure in eating harmless creatures, but no pleasure in shooting them. Have I done something wrong again? It isn't the pepper this time—and yet you're looking at me as if I was trying your temper."

The French side of Mr. Sarrazin's nature had got the better of him once more. He pointed indignantly to a supreme preparation of fowl on his friend's plate. "Do I actually see you picking out your truffles and putting them on one side?" he asked.

"Well," Randal acknowledged, "I don't care about truffles."

Mr. Sarrazin rose, with his plate in his hand and his fork ready for action. He walked round the table to his friend's side, and reverently transferred the neglected truffles to his own plate. "Randal, you will live to repent this," he said, solemnly. "In the meantime I am the gainer." Until he had finished the truffles no word fell from his lips. "I think I should have enjoyed them more," he remarked, "if I had concentrated my attention by closing my eyes; but you would have thought I was going to sleep." He recovered his English nationality, after this, until the dessert had been placed on the table and the waiter was ready to leave the room. At that auspicious moment he underwent another relapse. He insisted on sending his compliments and thanks to the cook.

"At last," said Randal, "we are by ourselves; and now I want to know why Catherine went to Germany."

The Faith Cure.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, ph your fate to the "anointing oil," or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" on the appearance of the first symptoms of consumption, which are a loss of appetite and flesh, general debility, night, dry, hacking cough, etc. Every day you defer treating your case in a rational manner, makes the disease harder to combat. Send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for Dr. Pierce's Treatise on Consumption.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw41tf

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-ham trusses, made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child case; and 95 out of every 100 of adults. The Committee.

The Court House Flag.

The individual "meteor flag" that floats over the Court House on state occasions won't "brave the battle and the breeze" much longer. The high winds have rent and torn its flowing folds in a most irreverent manner.

Hymeneal.

Mr. T. J. Bates, formerly of Peterborough, now an employee of the Union Pacific railway, was married April 19th, 1886, to Miss Hattie Hamline, of Nemaha, Nebraska. The ceremony took place at Huntington, Oregon, U. S. A.

The display deservedly attracts great attention.

A European War.

The air of Europe is murky with premonitions of a gigantic war. France and Russia are combining to oppose the other powers, and when war does break out the slaughter will be terrific, but it is nothing to the slaughter in prices of 2,000 overcoats and 2,000 suits to be made by "Gough, the Wonderful Cheap Man," during his great removal sale. He is moving into new premises, and clothing will be sold to clear at less than wholesale prices the next three weeks. Gough always keeps his word, and you may rely on this. Read his advertisement in this issue.

The Woodward Dramatic Company.

The Woodward Dramatic Company, with Miss Eugenie Lindeman, as leading actress, which opens a season of a fortnight here on the 20th, is well spoken of wherever it has appeared. The Kingston Whig says: "The performance of "Rip Van Winkle" last night drew the largest audience that has so far attended the performances of the Woodward Co., and it is not too much to say that every one was delighted. Not only was the piece well acted down to the smallest part, but it was got out grand with a completeness and appointment that were an placement to it." [illegible] Bradburn's Opera House, Saturday 18th. Prices 10, 20 and 30 cents.

A Runaway.

Last evening about 6.30 Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Brodie were driving up George street in a two-wheeled carriage. At the corner of Brock street the horse bolted and became unmanageable, running as far as Mr. Yelland's residence, where the horse slipped and fell to the ground. Here Mr. and Mrs. Brodie disembarked, and had no sooner got clear of the vehicle than the animal jumped to its feet and started off again, never stopping till it reached its own stable. The carriage was a total wreck.

Expanding "Business."

Mr. D. Bennett Sawyer, of the Peterborough Business College is making arrangements for the opening of a College in Port Hope. The Times says:—Prospects for opening a Business College in Port Hope are reported good, and it is now pretty well settled that Port Hope is to have another educational institution, of which we may feel proud. Mr. Sawyer may be seen at Lawrence Hall to-night. We hope that all who have any intention of attending the college, ladies or gentlemen, day or evening sessions, will decide now, as Mr. Sayer leaves town to-morrow, and will at once decide finally concerning the enterprise.

St. John's Bazaar.

Last night the bazaar was brought to a close and the result was most gratifying. The ladies had a genuine "clearing" sale; all the articles, with trifling exceptions, were disposed of at good prices. The demand for the abundant and excellent refreshments provided was good, large numbers having been provided with meals. Last night the attendances was large. The programme of tableaux vivant and music presented was very creditable, and contributed largely to the enjoyment of the evening. The large measure of success attending the bazaar is due entirely to the energy of the ladies, none of whom will deny to Mrs. Peck the largest share of credit.

Dick Gorman in "Conrad."

"Dick Gorman, as Conrad, entertained quite a large audience at the avenue theatre last evening, "says the Chicago Times-Democrat," in his sensational comedy drama, "Conrad." The scene is a pretty one—a wild canyon in Colorado, with a hut in the backgrounds—and Gorman and the La Petite Sadie, the precocious child actress, have the stage all to themselves. She dances and sings in a most natural manner, fairly capturing the ladies and earning the applause accorded her." Gorman's company will show at the Opera House here this evening. The company is good, the play is lively and full of interest from start to finish and a good house will doubtless be at the Opera House this evening.

Bailliebore Exhibition.

The directors of Bailliebore' Central Show have purchased grounds on which they intend to erect a hall and cattle sheds. A horse ring will also be constructed and the grounds placed in a convenient and altogether first-class condition. To this end, funds are necessary; but the farmers of the adjoining country are liberally subscribing, and no difficulty is anticipated on that score. As one means of raising the necessary amount, a supper and entertainment will be given in Bailliebore' on the 29th inst. Talent from Port Hope, Peterborough and Cobourg will assist at the concert.—Port Hope Times.

To-Morrow's Reception.

The following is a brief outline of the programme for the Blake-Laurier reception on Friday the 17th inst. The distinguished visitors will arrive per C. P. R. morning express, from the west at about 11.30 o'clock; they will then be escorted in carriages headed by the Fire Brigade Band, to the Oriental hotel, where after luncheon has been any of the friends who call will be introduced. They will be driven to the Opera House at about 2.30 o'clock p. m. Hon. Mr. Blake and Hon. Mr. Laurier will speak both in the afternoon and evening. Hon. Mr Laurier will address our respected French citizens in the old Music Hall, (market square), in French, at 7.30 p.m., sharp. The gallery of the Opera House will be reserved exclusively for the ladies at both meetings. The gentlemen who are expected to occupy seats on the platform will kindly note that they are requested to enter by the north stairs, going in by the stage. Ushers will be stationed at all doors to give the necessary information. The doors will not be opened until 2 o'clock, and no rush or jam will be permitted at the doors. The chair will be occupied by John Bertram, Esq., ex-M.P. God save the Queen.

Friends of the party are invited to join with their carriages in the procession tomorrow on the arrival of the C. P. R. train. Hon. Mr. Laurier will speak in the Opera House in the afternoon, to-morrow and in the evening also—after the delivery of his address to the French citizens in the old Music Hall.

Caught on the Crossing,

And Smashed by a Railway Train.

This morning Mr. John Saunders, of Ashburnham, who drives one of the vehicles of Mr. R. Wainright, butcher, had a narrow escape from death, getting off with severe injuries. He was driving over the track at the C. P. R. crossing at the Roman Catholic cemetery, in the south-western part of the town, this morning, when a rapidly moving train struck the waggon and smashed it to slivers. Mr. Saunders' escape from death was wonderful; as it is, he came off with a broken collar-bone, several broken ribs, sundry severe bruises, and some internal injuries, which Dr. Kincaid, who was called to attend to his injuries, says will not prove serious. It is conjectured that Mr. Saunders, having his head enveloped in wraps, did not hear the whistle (if any sounded) of the approaching train.

The Campaign at Campbellford.

Mr. Meredith Enjoys an Application of His Favorite Style—His Own Meeting Goes "Right About" Back on Him.

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 15.—Mr. W. R. Meredith, the leader of the Ontario Opposition, addressed a meeting at Campbellford to-night, called in his interest and in that of the local Conservative candidate. After the delivery of his usual speech, Mr. W. T. R. Preston, secretary of the Ontario Reform Association, wished to reply on behalf of the Government, but a clamorous effort was made to prevent him [illegible] Bobbish fair play gained the day and Mr. Preston was allowed forty-five minutes. This was a short space of time, but it was not wasted—Mr. Meredith got the direct political "trailing [illegible] Ontario, in short, [illegible] of the Ottawa oligarchy, etc., were all dealt with, and the ringing cheers that greeted the numerous telling points made by the advocate of the Mowat Administration showed that he had carried the meeting with him, and that a large gathering, called in Mr. Meredith's interests, had ended overwhelmingly in Hon. Mr. Mowat's favor.

County Court Sessions.

SECOND DAY—WEDNESDAY.

The grand jury made their PRESENTMENT as follows:—

We, the Grand Jurors of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, beg to make the following presentment:

We have to congratulate your Honour on the freedom from crime in this county, there having been no case of a criminal nature brought before us.

We have, in accordance with custom, examined the gaol premises, and have found everything in good condition and the persons confined therein well cared for.

We have to regret that persons of unsound mind are still confined in our gaols, and would urge that they be removed as soon as possible to a place better suited for their accommodation and where they can receive that individual attention their cases may require.

We have to express our satisfaction at the improvements being made in the county buildings, feeling convinced that they will add much to their comfort and convenience, and would suggest that the floor of the grand jury room be covered with some material to prevent the noise of chair-moving, etc., disturbing the court.

GEO. GLADMAN, Foreman.

Grand Jury Room, Peterborough, Dec. 15th, 1886.

DARLING vs. CROUGH was the first case called. Francis R. Darling, a young farmer of Dummer, purchased a 3-year-old colt from Jeremiah Crough, of Douro. It was claimed that the sale was so skilfully managed that plaintiff never examined the animal, but relied upon the representations made. Upon taking the colt home, however, it was found to be unsound. Plaintiff sought to recover the price paid for the animal—$75 cash and a note for $25.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The hearing of the horse case, Darling vs. Crough, was concluded. Verdict as follows: Plaintiff to pay defendant full price of horse, $100; plaintiff to pay also interest on the $25 note (25c.), and cost of keeping the colt a month by defendant, $3; plaintiff to be allowed $40 damages. The question of costs was reserved.

The appeal case of Rossiter vs. Cavanagh, assault, to set aside a conviction by the Police Magistrate in July last, was heard. Conviction quashed.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

CARPENTER v. LUNDY.—An action for illegal distress for rent. The plaintiff occupied an old building on the north side of Murray street, formerly used as a blacksmith shop or storehouse, owned by the defendant, for two or three years. No rent was paid, and last June the defendant made a summary seizure of the plaintiff's goods to liquidate the debt for rent. The plaintiff's counsel contended that no rent had been agreed upon, that the building was valueless as a dwelling, and that the seizure was illegal. The case was not concluded at this writing.

Omemee.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Business has been very fair with our merchants during the cold weather, necessitating winter goods.

The union services in the village hall under Mr. Marsh, evangelist, have been exceedingly interesting and profitable, the building crowded every night by people of all denominations. Mr. Marsh goes to Mt. Pleasant from here next week.

One of the most interesting, profitable, orderly and the best conducted political meetings, in the interests of Mr. Bick, Reform candidate, East Victoria, was held here last night (Tuesday). Old politicians say it was an excellent meeting. Mr. Bick was the first speaker, and made a good impression as being an honest, upright, loyal man. W. H. Dean, barrister, dwelt on the Separate Schools in a very able manner. Thos. Stuart, Barrister and etc., followed, dwelling on the Scripture Readings in Schools, fully convincing the large and intelligent audience, there was no foundation for the so-called Ross-Lynch Bible cry—proving his arguments and etc. from the Mail and prominent Conservative lawyers and ministers of different denominations. John A. Barron, Barrister, then followed with an hour's speech, taking up the public issues of the day, and kept the audience spell bound, and delighted with the satisfactory proceedings of the Ontario government in every respect, showing how thankful we should be for having such a leader as the Hon. Mr. Mowat. Those who were in doubt before this meeting, went away fully convinced. Mr. Bick is sure to redeem East Victoria.

The Scripture Readers.

What Prominent Persons Say About the Partisan Attacks Upon Them

Rev. Dr. Caven, Principal of Knox College.

The Minister of Education is attacked from various quarters in regard to the book of "Scripture Readings," for use in the Public schools. This attack seems to me quite groundless, and such as no exigencies of party warfare can justify.

Rev. Dr. Dewart Editor of Christian Guardian

I do not hesitate to say that, if the other grounds on which it is alleged that Protestantism is in danger in this province, are as weak, as flimsy, and as futile as what has been urged about the "Scripture Readings" in the Public Schools, they are not likely to secure the confidence of candid and intelligent people.

Rev. Dr. Cochrane, Brantford.

Unless we give up our national and non-sectarian system of education, and erect denominational schools, subsidised by Government, where each church may teach its own creed, and put its own interpretation upon Scripture, I see no better way than that which has been adopted. To name such a retrograde movement is to doom it. No reasonable man would for a moment seriously consider such a proposal.

Mr. W. H. C. Kerr, Compiler of the Selections.

I have had neither time nor inclination hitherto to notice the idiotic clap-trap that has been written to the newspapers on this subject by people who ought to know better. I trusted to the obvious malevolence of the writers being the being the best antidote to their words.

Rev. Dr. Nelles, Principal of Victoria University.

If there be, therefore, any blame to be attached to the Government in this transaction, we of the Churches must share it, and in a matter of this particular kind I think we should take the larger share. But the fair inference seems to be that a work so prepared, so examined, and so approved, is not open to any serious objections, nor the use of it in our Public Schools a ground for reasonable complaint, much less a ground for attack upon the Government.

We invite inspection of Mr Smart's stock of Xmas Cards—the best advertisement we have ever had. A. L. Davis & Co.

WHY
WHY people pay rent when houses and lots can be purchased on such easy terms as are offered by the undersigned. Come and inspect our work and see for yourselves how we construct our houses. Our chief aim and study is to build substantial, warm, frost and damp proof houses. I am offering good building lots, and will build solid brick houses, nine-inch walls, stripped and in bad, two stories, for less money than you can buy frame or veneered buildings. We cordially invite those who anticipate renting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I've sold gives first-class satisfaction, and I am determined that every house I build shall be a standing testimony to honest building. JOHN GARLEAU, Donegal Street, 2nd block west of St. Andrew's Church. wd

CAMPBELL SCANDAL.

DR. BIRD'S RELATIONS WITH THE LADY WERE ALWAYS PROPER.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—In the Campbell divorce case to-day Dr. Bird testified that he had a long acquaintance with Lady Miles and the Blood family. He denied that he ever had any other relations with Lady Colin Campbell than those proper between physician and patient. He had searched his instrument case and had found a letter from Lady Colin to him which Lord Colin's nurse, Annie Duffy, had testified was there. The letter was one written when she was 16 years of age and was a childish affair. (Witness produced the letter.) Witness attended the concert at New Crom at which Lady Colin sang. He went as one of the audience and sat in the body of the hall. Lady Colin broke down while singing. Witness then took her to his house to procure for her some medicine difficult to obtain elsewhere. Lady Colin left five minutes afterward. It was not true that he caressed plaintiff in the cab. When Lady Miles told witness that Lord Colin and his nurse alleged that Lady Colin had had a miscarriage, witness at once pronounced the statement an infamous accusation. In reference to the night witness remained so long at Lady Colin's bedside he said he had administered opium to her and while waiting for the outcome fell asleep in an arm-chair. It had been hospital day and he was very tired. Lord Colin awoke him, but the suggestion that there was any impropriety in witness' conduct was groundless.

Counsel for Gen. Butler, another of the correspondents, said he would not call the General because, he submitted, no testimony had been produced which incriminated him.

The judge said there was evidence against him. He would say nothing regarding its strength, but if Gen. Butler was innocent he ought to come to court and say so.

The Duke of Marlborough's counsel submitted that no testimony had been produced establishing the slightest impropriety between the Duke and Lady Colin.

Chief Shaw's counsel appealed to the court to say whether his client was not a witness of truth and honor.

Gen. Butler's counsel denounced the stories told by the servants regarding his client as absurd.

Dr. Bird's counsel contended that there was but one witness to sustain the charge against his client, and she was the malicious old woman, Annie Duffy. No man's honor could be secure, and the condition of society would be intolerable if such stories as those of Annie Duffy were believed without the strongest possible kind of corroborative proof.

Mr. Finlay, counsel for Lord Colin, contended that the case of Lady Colin against her husband had been pulverised by the evidence produced by him. If Lady Colin were an accessory with Lady Miles in inventing the charges against Lord Colin, then she was capable of anything. The case was then adjourned.

VERY MUCH LIKE MURDER.

A Tragic Occurrence That Shocked the People of Cargill.

CARGILL, Dec. 16.—A sad shooting accident occurred at the Cargill boarding-house between 1.30 and 2 o'clock this afternoon. It appears that Joseph Johnson of Ellengowan went into the boarding-house under the influence of liquor, and he and a jeweler named Ulrich got into an argument about nationality. The proprietor of the boarding-house, Jickling by name, wanted to get Johnson out of the house, and picked up what he supposed to be an empty gun. He put a small charge of powder in it, placed a cap on and handed it to a man named Griffith, who happened to be in at the time with several others, and told him to point it at the floor and scare the old man. But instead of doing as requested Griffith placed the gun on the bar and within a few inches of Johnson's body and fired. The man dropped instantly, and never spoke after. The shot took effect just below the shoulder blade. The rumor current is that the shooting was done accidentally, as Jickling did not know about the gun being heavily loaded. Both men have given themselves up to the law.

THE BULGARIAN TROUBLE.

The Bulgars Deny That They Offered the Throne to Ferdinand.

SOFIA, Dec. 16.—The Bulgarians deny that they have invited Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha to become a candidate for the Bulgarian throne.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Prince Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg-Gotha claims that the Bulgarian delegation officially offered him the throne of Bulgaria.

VIENNA, Dec. 16.—It is stated that the Prince of Wales will visit the Emperor of Austria at Vienna on the occasion of the Emperor's birthday. [illegible] Count Kalnoky will be present at the banquet given in honor of the Prince of Wales.

"PLAN" INTERRUPTED.

DILLON, O'BRIEN AND OTHERS ARRESTED AT LOUGHREA.

DUBLIN, Dec. 16.—John Dillon, member of Parliament for East Mayo; Wm. O'Brien, editor of United Ireland; Matthew Harris, member of Parliament for East Galway, and David Sheehy, member of Parliament for South Galway, were arrested to-day in the town of Loughrea, County Galway, charged with conspiracy to defraud. The prisoners have been acting as trustees in conducting the "plan of campaign" and have been receiving from dissatisfied tenants the reduced rents refused by landlords or landlords' agents. At the time of making the arrests the police took away from Mr. Dillon £100, which he had received in trust from tenants. The four gentlemen were taken before a magistrate and remanded for a week.

How the Arrests Were Affected.

DUBLIN, Dec. 16.—An immense Nationalist demonstration was held at Loughrea to-day. Father Cunningham presided, and a number of other clergymen and Messrs. Dillon, O'Brien, Harris and Sheehy were on the platform. A large contingent of Lord Clanricarde's tenants was present. Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien addressed the meeting and then opened Nationalist rent offices. Hundreds of tenants came forward and paid their rents. Suddenly the police raided the offices. Inspector Davies seized the money, documents and books and arrested Mr. Dillon. It is alleged that Mr. Dillon was roughly treated by the inspector. The police proceeded upstairs and took possession of more money and documents. They then arrested Mr. O'Brien and afterward Messrs. Harris and Sheehy. The specific charge against the four gentlemen is that they were conspiring to induce tenants not to pay their lawful rents.

Mr. Dillon struggled with Inspector Davies for possession of the rent money seized by the latter. The four gentlemen arrested gave bail in $1000 each. It is rumored that the police have been instructed to pursue a similar course in the case of other Nationalist rent collectors.

The National League leaders have decided to continue their present tactics. Several of them will leave Dublin to-morrow for various parts of Ireland for the purpose of receiving rents.

A Rent Trustee Warned.

DUBLIN, Dec. 16.—Thomas Mayne, Parnellite member of Parliament for Middle Tipperary, who in the capacity of trustee under "the plan of campaign" is receiving from Warford County tenants the reduced rents refused by the landlord and their agents, has been served with notice by the agent of Brooke's estates that if he makes any other use of the moneys so deposited with him than to return it to the tenants the law will be applied to him. This threat, if carried out, will test the question of the rights of tenants to permit their entrusted rents to be expended in fighting the landlords or the Government in the prosecutions for participation in "the plan of campaign."

Comment of London Journals.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The Daily News says, commenting on the arrests at Loughrea yesterday: "We regret that the Irish Nationalists meditate open defiance of the law. We emphatically state that English Liberals can have nothing whatever to do with outrage, dishonesty or resistance to the law. The Government will be driven from one arbitrary act to another, and further arrests may be expected. Lord Hartington gave the ministers the cue at the Unionist Conference and they have taken it. There can be only one end to such a policy, but much trouble will precede it."

The Morning Post urges the Government to follow up the blow, at every hazard, to the needful end.

The Chronicle says that should such a drastic remedy fail it would be reasonable for the Government to apply for fresh powers, and such an appeal would not be made in vain.

The Daily Telegraph says that the strong, resolute action of the Government will deserve to win the all but unanimous approval of the country.

French Intrigue in Africa.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—The Bombay Gazette says that the French are actively intriguing against the British in the Somali country on the African east coast, south of the Gulf of Aden. A party of Frenchmen recently hoisted the French flag over Dongarita, which lies within territory under British protection. The English agent at Balhar has gone with twenty-five men to remove the flag. Two French gun-boats have left Aden since the agent's departure, and it is presumed they have proceeded to Dongarita. The British gun-boat Penguin has followed the French vessels.

Spanish Republicans Denounced.

MADRID, Dec. 16.—In the chamber of deputies to-day Senor Segusta, President of the Council, denounced the revolutionary doctrines of the extreme Republican party, whose conditional offers of peace the Government was unable to accept. He warned the Republicans that their liberty depended on their own acts, and said that the Government would carry out its program of reforms despite all threats of revolution.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 16.—Letters enclosed in packets have been found behind furniture in the reading room of the Grand Hotel in this city. The letters are part of the mail which was recently stolen from the Ostend express. The waiters in the hotel recognize a photograph sent here by the London police as that of a former guest of the house.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 16.—Major Nathaniel F. Hurd, who was an officer in the war of 1812, died at his home in Montclair yesterday. NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—O. W. Cutler, collector of customs of Suspension Bridge, made a seizure of a lot of diamonds here to-day and turned them over to Collector Magone. The diamonds were followed from Suspension Bridge by Mr. Cutler and captured.

The Church and State in France.

"A COVETOUS SON."

He Attempts to Murder His Father in Order to Get His Money.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—Yesterday two men entered the house of John T. Hewitt, at Roger's Park, knocked him down and robbed him of $70. Two hours later one of the men, John Harris, was apprehended and made a confession, stating that Harry Hewitt, a son of the man robbed, was his accomplice. It now appears that young Hewitt not only intended to rob his father, but to murder him. The older Hewitt is about 60 years of age, and is quite wealthy. The robbers had a blanket in front of them as they approached the old man. The latter grappled with them, but they overpowered him and tied his hands and feet. Harris says young Hewitt drew a revolver and fired at his father, but was so excited that the bullet grazed his (Harris') head. Young Hewitt, who is only 18 years of age, was arrested this morning. He refuses to talk. It seems there has been considerable trouble in the Hewitt family, and the older Hewitt is said to be very parsimonious.

FACTS VERSUS FANCIES.

At Campbellford on Wednesday night a Conservative stump speaker asserted that the extravagance of the Mowat government was so great that the expenditure exceeds the revenue and that direct taxation for provincial purposes was staving the people in the face. Let us examine this outrageously incorrect assertion and see how it squares with facts. The annual revenue, expenditure, surplus and deficit for the thirteen clear fiscal years the Mowat administration has been in power, is shown in the following table:

	Revenue.	Expenditure.	Surplus.	Deficit.
1873....	$3,288,464	$4,698,212	$472,252
1874....	3,611,550	3,282,339	329,211
1875....	3,469,295	3,079,459	389,836
1876....	3,258,279	3,150,159	108,120
1877....	3,403,240	3,312,105	90,135
1878....	2,964,139	3,068,624		104,484
1879....	3,443,617	3,295,528	148,089
1880....	3,691,220	3,585,623	105,597
1881....	3,746,771	3,996,204	250,567
1882....	3,998,450	3,457,220	458,230
1883....	3,438,041	3,649,171		165,229
1884....	3,443,574	3,570,035		126,164
1885....	3,297,430	3,293,565	3,864
Totals.....			$2,778,443	$618,797
Net addition to the surplus from 1873 to 1886, out of revenue.....			$2,159,646

This, to use homely, Anglo-Saxon speech, gives the lie direct to the statement made, and it will easily be seen that it would require many years at the above rate, for the country to be brought to the verge of direct taxation, in fact at the above rate, direct taxation will never come. But if Mr. Meredith gets his hands on the reins of power we know that direct taxation would speedily arrive. He proposes to disturb the whole of the present government system of relations with the municipalities, which will throw a large share of the burden of public expenditure upon the municipalities, which is now borne by the Government. The financial policy of the Mowat Administration, in fact, tends in an exactly opposite way from direct taxation, and is carried out to relieve, to the fullest possible extent, the people of the burden of local taxation. To this end much more is spent every year than is required for simply carrying on the government of the Province. The absolutely necessary public service of Ontario could have been conducted the past fourteen years at an average cost of between $900,000 and $700,000 a year. As the annual revenue of the Province averages over two and a half millions a year, it follows that the amount paid out yearly in relief of local taxation is very little less than $1,800,000. These facts and figures, which may be verified from the public records, show the absurdity and dishonesty of the argument that the "growing annual expenditure of the Province must soon lead to direct taxation." There is direct taxation now. The people tax themselves through the municipal imachinery for local public works, and other purposes. Had the policy of distributing nearly two millions of surplus revenue each year not been steadily pursued, as it has been pursued by the Mowat Administration, they would have been compelled either to tax themselves much more heavily, or to do without many of the conveniences they now enjoy—perhaps both. Liberal expenditure of Provincial revenue has not hastened, but postponed, direct taxation of a very burdensome kind. Mr. Meredith proposes to change all this, and, if the people consent to giving him the power, they may expect before long to do by direct taxation the work done at present at Provincial expense, in supporting the cost of education, and encouragement to agriculture and arts, hospitals, charities, care of lunatics, colonization roads and the expense of the administration of justice. If Mr. Meredith has his way, he will turn all these over to the municipalities, and, if the municipalities have charge of them, they must furnish the funds, and the only way the municipalities have of raising money is by direct taxation. The ratepayer will decide with his ballot on Dec. 20th which way he prefers.

There is probably no truth in the report that Bob Ingersoll is to be imported to lecture in the interest of the mischief-makers, who, to make political capital, declare that Protestantism is in danger. Yet he cares as much about the interests of Protestantism as many of the ranting unregenerates who are now raising the howl. Little do these firebrands care how much discord in society they stir up, how much ill feeling between friendly neighbors they arouse, nor how they prostitute the gospel of peace to promote the doctrine of disunity, so long as they can make party capital out of such courses of action.

British Fair Play.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner.

With much astonishment and regret, I noticed in a late number of the Evening Review an effort on the part of the editor to stir up strife at the meeting to be held tonight in Bradburn's Opera House by Messrs. Blake and Laurier. I never knew a more deliberate attempt to put down free speech than was made by the editorial in question. It shows a consciousness of weakness on the part of the editor of that paper, when he can descend to brute force to prevent Mr. Laurier from speaking on the evening in question, and if he has any shame left in him, or has any regard for the respect of his own political party, he will promptly apologize for using such base insinuation and candidly acknowledge he did wrong. He is not, by much radically mean, advocating the interests of the party to which he belongs, and I am aware that his conduct has been repudiated by several respectable Conservatives, who say they believe in justice and fair play. Reformers gave Sir John Macdonald and his friends a quiet and respectful hearing. They did on that occasion what they always do, uphold free speech, no matter how much they may disapprove of the speaker. The Review sets a bad example to the press, and for the sake of truth and right, it ought to for its own sake, it ought to make speedy amends for its conduct. Everywhere else Mr. Laurier has been received and treated respectfully and fairly.

Yours truly,
BRITISH FAIR PLAY.

Literary Notices.

The prospectus of the Home Magazine states that with the year 1887 the thirty-fifth year of publication is begun, and we can well believe that such a long life has been a useful one, if we may judge by the sample of the January issue, now at hand. Outside and inside the Magazine is an attractive one, and when we consider the well-established reputation of the Home as a safe literary friend for every household, and the low cost of the Magazine, we rather think that its subscribers get about as much for their money as they could ask.

The stories, illustrations, and special articles in the "departments" are all good and we thing of greater than usual interest.

Published by T. S. Arthur & Son, Philadelphia, who furnish samples of the issue for half price, ten cents.

THE Irish Canadian, an out-and-out Tory —Conservative is too mild a word—journal, after complimenting the Mail on its ability, thus refers to its sectarian crusade and its consequences:—

"It is lamentable that one so lavishly endowed with intellectual gifts of the highest order, as the editor of the Mail undoubtedly is, should prostitute them to the base purposes of the politician; and is a way, too, that is criminal, not only in the sight of man, but in the sight of God. * * * But in a few weeks the Mail will be undeceived. The battle to be fought at the polls on the 22th of this month will open the Mail's eyes something wider than they were ever opened before. The Mail will then find that its fine ability has been wasted in a bad cause; and that it takes something more argumentative and substantial than brilliant metaphor to convince Canadians that their liberties are threatened by a sixth of the population."

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from obscure nervous pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's NERVILINE, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but send to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure. 6d50

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. ocdw41

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XXIX.

As a lawyer Randal's guest understood that a narrative of events can only produce the right effect, on one condition—it must begin at the beginning. Having related all that had been said and done during his visit to the cottage, including his first efforts in the character of an angler under Kitty's supervision, he stopped to fill his glass again, and then attempted (hardly by delicately) the plan he had devised for escaping from the spies by crossing the lake in the fog.

"What did the ladies say to it?" Randal inquired. "Who spoke first?"

"Mrs. Presty, of course! She objected to risk her life on the water in a fog. Mrs. Linley showed a resolution for which I was not prepared. She thought of Kitty, saw the value of my suggestion, and went away at once to consult with the landlady. In the meantime I sent for the gardener and told him what I was thinking of. He was one of those stolid Englishmen who possess resources which don't express themselves outwardly. Judging by his face you would have said he was subsiding into slumber under the infliction of a sermon, instead of listening to a lawyer proposing a stratagem. When I had done the man showed the metal he was made of. In plain English he put three questions which gave me the highest opinion of his intelligence. 'How much luggage, sir?' 'As little as they can conveniently take with them,' I said. 'How many persons?' 'The two ladies, the child, and myself.' 'Can you row, sir?' 'In any water you like, Mr. Gardener, fresh or salt.' Think of asking me, an athletic Englishman, if I could row! In an hour more we were ready to embark and the blessed fog was thicker than ever. Mrs. Presty yielded under protest; Kitty was wild with delight; her mother was quiet and resigned. But one circumstance occurred that I didn't quite understand—the presence of a stranger on the pier with a gun in his hand."

"You don't mean one of the spies?"

"Nothing of the sort. I mean no idea of the gardener's. He had been a sailor in his time—and that's a trade which teaches a man (if he's smart for anything) to think and act, on his thought in time and the same moment. He had taken a peep at the blackguards in front of the house, and had recognized the shorter of the two as a native of the place, perfectly well aware that one of the fixtures attached to the cottage was a boathouse. 'That chap is not such a fool as he looks,' says the gardener. 'If he mentions the boathouse the other fellow from London may have his suspicions. I thought I would post my son on the pier—that quiet young man there with the gun—to keep a lookout. If he sees another boat (there are half a dozen on this side of the lake) putting off after us, he will come to fire, on the chance of hearing him. A little notion of mine, sir, to prevent our being surprised in the fog.' Do you see any objection to it?' Objection! In the days when diplomacy was something more than a solemn pretense, what a member of congress that gardener would have made! Well, we shipped our oars, and away we went. Not quite haphazard—for we had a compass with us. Our course was as straight as we could go, to a village on the opposite side of the lake, called Brightfold. Nothing happened for the first quarter of an hour—and then, by the living Jingo (excuse my vulgarity), we heard the gun!"

"What did you do?"

"Went on rowing, and held a council. This time I came out as the clever one of the party. The men were following us in the dark; they would have to guess at the direction we had taken, and they would most likely assume (in such weather as we had) that we should choose the shortest way across the lake. At my suggestion we changed our course, and made for a large town, higher up on the shore, called Tawley. We landed, and waited for events, and made no discovery of another boat behind us. The fools had justified my confidence in them—they had gone to Brightfold. There was half an hour to spare before the next train came to Tawley; and the fog was beginning to lift on that side of the lake. We looked at the shops, and I made a purchase in the town."

"Stop a minute," said Randal. "In Brightfold on the railway?"

"No."

"Is there an electric telegraph at the place?"

"Yes."

"That was awkward, wasn't it? The first thing those men would do would be to telegraph to Tawley."

"Not a doubt of it. How would they describe us, do you think?"

Randal answered: "A middle-aged gentleman—two ladies, one of them elderly—and a little girl. Quite enough to identify you at Tawley and the station-master understood the message."

"Shall I tell you what the station-master discovered, with the message in his hand? No elderly lady, no middle-aged gentleman; nothing more remarkable than one lady—and a little boy."

Randal's face brightened. "You parted company, of course," he said; "and you disguised [illegible]. How did you manage it?"

"Did I say just now that we looked at the shops, and that I made a purchase in the town? A boy's ready-made suit—not at all a bad fit for Kitty! Mrs. Linley put on the suit and tucked up the child's hair under a straw hat in an empty yard—no killers about in that bad weather. We said good-by and parted with grievous misgivings on my side, which proved (thank God) to have been quite needless. Kitty and her mother went to the station, and Mrs. Presty and I hired a carriage and drove away to the head of the lake to catch the train to London. Do you know, Randal, I have altered my opinion of Mrs. Presty."

Randal smiled. "You, too, have found something in that old woman," he said, "which doesn't appear on the surface."

"The occasion seems to bring that something out," the lawyer remarked. "When I proposed the separation, and mentioned my reasons, I expected to find some difficulty in persuading Mrs. Presty to give up the adventurous journey with her daughter and her grandchild. I reminded her that she had friends in London who would receive her and got snubbed for taking the liberty. 'I know that as well as you do. Come along—I'm ready to go with you.' It isn't agreeable to my feelings to own it, but I expected to hear her say that she would consent to any sacrifice for the sake of her daughter. [illegible] I suggested [illegible] she [illegible] 'I'll do anything,' she said, 'to baffle Hatherley.' I never felt more glad I was [illegible] her [illegible] Randal, I am [illegible]

[illegible] sent us two seamen, and we had to wait for the next train. And what do you think happened? The two seamen followed us in sight of following Mrs. Linley! They had identified, no doubt, at the livery stable where we hired the carriage—had recognized the description of us—and had taken the long journey to London for nothing. Mrs. Presty and I shook hands at the terminus the best friends that ever traveled together, with the best of motives. After that I think I deserve another glass of wine."

"Go on with your story, and you shall have another bottle," cried Randal. "What did Catherine and the child do after they left you?"

"They did the safest thing—they left England. Mrs. Linley distinguished herself on this occasion. It was her excellent idea to avoid popular ports of departure, like Folkestone and Dover, which were sure to be watched, and to get away, if the thing could be done, from some place on the east coast. We consulted our guide-book and found that a line of steamers sailed from Hull to Bremen once a week. A tedious journey from our part of Cumberland, with some troublesome changing of trains, but they got there in time to embark. My first news of them reached me in a telegram from Bremen. There they waited for further instructions. I sent the instructions by a thoroughly capable and trustworthy man—an Italian courier, known to me by an experience of twenty years. Shall I confess it? I thought I had done rather a clever thing in providing Mrs. Linley with a friend in need while I was away from her."

"I think so, too," said Randal.

"Wrong, completely wrong. I had made a mistake—I had been too clever, and I got my reward accordingly. You know how I advised Mrs. Linley?"

"Yes. You persuaded her, with the greatest difficulty, to apply for divorce."

"Very well. I had made all the necessary arrangements for the trial, when I received a letter from Germany. My charming client had changed her mind, and declined to apply for the divorce. There was my reward for having been too clever!"

"I don't understand you."

"My dear fellow, you are dull to-night. I had been so successful in protecting Mrs. Linley and the child, and my excellent courier had found such a charming place of retreat for them in one of the suburbs of Hanover, that she saw no reason now for taking the shocking course that I had recommended to her—so repugnant to all her most cherished convictions; so sinful and so shameful in its doing of evil that good might come. Experience had convinced her that (thanks to me) there was no fear of Kitty being discovered and taken from her. She therefore begged me to write to my agent in Edinburgh, and tell him that her application to the court was withdrawn. Ah, you understand my position at last. The headstrong woman was running a risk which renewed all my anxieties. By every day's post I expected to hear that she had paid the penalty of her folly, and that your brother had succeeded in getting possession of the child. Wait a little before you laugh at me. But for the courier, the thing would have really happened a week since."

The Faith Cure.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, pin your faith to the "anointing oil," or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" on the appearance of the first symptoms of consumption, which are a loss of appetite and flesh, general debility, slight, dry, hacking cough, etc. Every day you defer treating your case in a rational manner, makes the disease harder to combat. Send ten cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for Dr. Pierce's Treatise on Consumption.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, I looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two "reputation trusses" made in York State, costing me $40. The Daily Examiner.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1886.

THE LIBERAL LEADERS!

A Cordial and Enthusiastic Reception.

Gaily Decorated Streets and Buildings—A Splendid Procession and Grand Welcome.

Hon. Messrs. Blake and Laurier arrived on the 11.30 C. P. R. train this morning and were accorded a most hearty and enthusiastic reception. At an early hour visitors from the country began to arrive, and the streets presented an animated appearance.

The business streets were profusely decorated with flags, bunting, etc. Across the street from the Opera house to the Grand Central extended a scroll bearing the words, "Welcome Blake, Our Coming Premier;" farther up suspended in mid street was a banner having on one side the words of the prayer, "God Save the Queen," and on the other, "Mowat and his Colleagues will Guard our Provincial Rights," and further on another banner with the mottoes, "Mowat the Defender of Ontario's Rights," "An Honesty Government Makes a Happy People," and from the Cox block to the EXAMINER buildings stretched a streamer with the word "Welcome" blazoned upon it. Among the places of business decorated with flags and bunting were Hamilton's Agricultural works, and the premises of Fairweather & Co., J. C. Turnbull, Hall, Innes & Co., J. Braden, James Alexander, M. Sullivan, Oriental Hotel, D. Bolleghum, Mercer & Co., W. W. Johnston, J. D. Tully, G. E. Henderson, A. Clegg, the Cox block, the EXAMINER buildings, J. McKee, Van Every & Brisbin, Rowse's Trade Palace, T. Menzies, Schofield & Co., etc., etc.

As the hour for the arrival of the train, bearing the distinguished statesmen, arrived an immense gathering collected at the C. P. R. station. As the train rolled in, the band struck up a lively air, and as Messrs. Blake and Laurier, the Liberal leaders, descended from the palace car, they were greeted with loud cheers. They were then escorted to the carriage in waiting for them, driven by flag decked, dashing four in hands. A procession was then formed, headed by the Fire Brigade Band. The first carriage contained Hon. Messrs. Blake and Laurier, Mr. Geo. A Cox, Commons candidate for the West Riding, and Mr. John Bertram, ex-M. P. The second carriage also driven by four horses contained Messrs. T. G. Hazlitt, Peter Hamilton, J. R. Stratton, West Riding local candidate; Thos. Blezard, East Riding local candidate; John Long, East Riding Commons candidate; M. Millar. The third carriage contained Messrs. Rich. Hall, C. Boyce, T. F. Bell, Dr. Fife, and W. S. Rexborough. Following these was a long line of carriages containing leading citizens. The procession proceeded up George street. At the Hamilton Agricultural works the workmen had gathered in front of the establishment and hailed the Liberal leaders with lusty cheers, which were cordially acknowledged. Arrived at the Oriental Hotel, the distinguished visitors, on alighting, were again tumultuously cheered. After partaking of luncheon, at which they were joined by about twenty prominent gentlemen, Messrs. Blake and Laurier held a reception, and large numbers availed themselves of the privilege of paying their respects to these distinguished statesmen.

At two-thirty o'clock the visitors and their friends were driven to the Opera House, where addresses were delivered.

To-night Hon. Wilfred Laurier will address the French citizens, in their own tongue, at the old Music Hall. Hon. Mr. Blake will deliver an address in the evening, followed by Hon. Mr. Laurier at the conclusion of his Music Hall address. The gallery of the Opera House, which is magnificently decorated, will be reserved exclusively for ladies. The fullest protections are made for entertaining them.

"Tell," tar the Jurors.

His Honor Judge Weller in discharging the petit jury yesterday afternoon complimented them upon the intelligence and attention with which they had listened to the evidence in the cases, and further stated that their decisions had in every instance concurred with the opinion of the court.

Teachers and Students.

London's Rowdy Tactics.

A scurrilous fly sheet was circulated in London yesterday by the party that is striving to create a war of a race and creed in Canada. In it Mr. Laurier was called a traitor and a rebel, and a quotation was given from one of his speeches, in which he said that the death of the Metis leader must be avenged by constitutional means. The compilers of the fly-sheet most despicably omitted the last three words, making it appear that the speaker was arguing in favor of rapine and bloodshed. Such tactics, calculated as they are to provoke the worst of feelings, are most deplorable and base.

The Pig Iron Case.

The iron case of Bertram v. Massey was brought up Thursday, says the Mail, before Chief Justice Cameron by way of motion for judgment. The action was brought by Bertram & Co. to recover the price of large quantities of iron which the company refused to pay for on the ground that it was of inferior quality. At the trial, which occupied nearly two weeks, the jury, in answer to questions by the judge, made certain findings, and on these the plaintiffs now move for judgment in the favour. The Company also move for judgment, contending that the findings are substantially for them. Judgment was reserved.

Law and Order.

It is to respectable Conservatives that the public will look to see that certain elements of the party do not disgrace it and the town by disturbance at the Opera house or Music hall to-night, by preventing free speech and British fair play. The local organ, with a strange forgetfulness of its place in a civilized community, after for days inciting to violence and after kindling inflammable material, demands a "hearing." If the fair name of the town is disgraced by any acts of rowdyism, the public will naturally lay the blame on the Conservative party, and it is for respectable Conservatives to see that they are not made a party to any disreputable conduct. An overt breach of the peace and an overt disregard of Her Majesty's laws is in spirit and principle an act of rebellion.

The Wide Awake "Whig"

The splendid "special edition" just issue of the Kingston Whig, consisting of 16 pages marks a most creditable journalistic episode in the history of the "Limestone City." Its contents are descriptive, biographical and reminiscent. The first comprises descriptions and wood cuts of several public institutions, churches etc. The second, sketches of the lives of prominent living citizens, with portraits and the third, sketches of the growth of the city. The letter press throughout is exceedingly interesting and the wood cuts are of a most superior character, equal in clearness and delicacy of outline to the illustrations of a magazine. The typography of the special number is a model of neatness never surpassed in any newspaper. Taking it all together the Whig's special number is a credit to both the establishment from which it emanated and to the city whose intelligent appreciation of enterprise, energy taste and journalistic skill, has made such an enterprise a practicable and, it is to be hoped profitable undertaking.

Brought Down the House.

Dick Gorman's Comedy Company in "Conrad; or, The Hand of a Friend," played to a fairly well filled house of enthusiastic onlookers last night. The company is a strange congregation of old and young, famous and obscure performers and the play is a strange compound still. As an exchange puts it, the author, when he constructed "Conrad," must have been in a boggish frame of mind, for he grabbed everything in reach of a playwright and utilized it. He left nothing behind, and acted as though his "play" must be an "omnibus" intended to carry everything, he gathered into his "crucible" comedy, tragedy, burlesque, buffoonery, precocity and dialectology, and so mixed them with startling climaxes, thrilling situations, inane absurdities, red fire and wonderful pistol practice, that the mass when cooled, crystallized into a three-act marvel that shows off to advantage the versatile talents of the dialecticians and character actors, and sets the house, especially the "gallery gods," almost insane with enthusiasm. As a sensational, incoherent, inexplicable, audience-pleasing success, "it takes the bakery" without a doubt. Dick Gorman, as "Conrad," the hero of the play, was a marvellous combination of sunshine and shade, while Harry Brown, as "Peckoniff," was ridiculously absurd and convulsed the audience with laughter at every turn. Little Elsie, "La Petite Sadie," was a wonder of childish precocity and early training. The singing of Dick Gorman and Miss Melville (Amelia Brannigan), from the "cold end," was excellent. Indeed the play was, without doubt, one of the best humorous dramas ever shown on the stage in Peterborough.

Land Law Amendment Association.

Address of the Canada Land Law Amendment Association to the Legal Owners and Other Electors of Ontario.

This Association, composed chiefly of land owners, was formed to introduce the Torrens system of land transfer into Canada. Its members have no interests other than those of all owners of real estate. Mainly through its efforts that system has been introduced into, and is now the recognized system of transferring land in Manitoba, Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, in fact in all that immense territory extending from Rat Portage to the Rocky Mountains, and it is also in operation, in the county of York and city of Toronto in Ontario. It is in operation in other important colonies. It has very largely reduced the cost of land transfer in these colonies. Ownership of land is absolutely certain. Suits about titles are unknown.

The present system of land transfer entails a needless cost of at least a half million of dollars annually on the land owners of Ontario for which they receive no benefit whatever.

This Association advocates the sweeping away of the last vestige of the Feudal System. Why should the laws relating to estates, springing and shifting uses, contingent remainders and other relics of a barbarous age, be still in force in Ontario?

Why should the Province continue any longer to be saddled with a system of land transfer which costs the owners of land so large an annual outlay?

Why should the virgin soil of the Algoma, Thunder Bay, Rainy River, Nipissing and Temiscaming Districts, be saddled with an effete system which in a few years it will take thousands of dollars to be relieved from?

Electors will you insist on your representative supporting the introduction of a better system? It is a matter of real vital importance to everyone who now holds or expects to hold real estate, because the present system entails such an unnecessary expense and delay as well as risk on all transactions in which land is concerned.

This Association strongly urges upon you to press upon the attention of all candidates the importance of giving their support to the extension of the Torrens System of Land Transfer to the whole of the Province.

(1) Because that system has been found to be of great advantage to the land owners of Australia, where it has been in operation over twenty years; and the advantage it has conferred on them it will also confer on you.

(2) Because it will give to you and to your heirs after you certainty of title.

(3) Because it will do away with long deeds and longer bills of cost.

(4) Because it will prevent the possibility of defects being found in the titles to your lands possibly after years of peaceable possession.

(5) Because it will enable you to sell and transfer your land as easily as if it were registered bonds or bank stock.

(6) Because it will largely increase the saleable value of all lands brought under its operation.

(7) Because it will reduce the cost of all transactions in land at least 50 per cent., and thereby greatly facilitate the acquisition of freehold homes by the working classes.

Do not be led away by the following and other side issues raised by interested parties:—

(1) That the agitation has been got up for the benefit of money-lending institutions, which is false. It is the borrowers' and not the companies' interests which will be benefitted. The adoption of the system advocated by this Association, by the unanimous vote of the Parliament of Canada and of the Legislature of Manitoba, should be a sufficient answer to this charge.

(2) The cry of centralization is also baseless, as the transfers and rules of land will continued to be carried on in the localities in which the property is situated, as it is now.

The Scripture Readers.

What Prominent Persons Say About the Partisan Actions Upon Them

Rev. Dr. Caven, Principal of Knox College.

The Minister of Education is attacked from various quarters in regard to the book of "Scripture Readings," for use in the Public schools. This attack seems to me quite groundless, and such as no exigencies of party warfare can justify.

Rev. Dr. Dewart Editor of Christian Guardian

I do not hesitate to say that, if the other grounds on which it is alleged that Protestantism is in danger in this province, are as weak, as flimsy, and as futile as what has been urged about the "Scripture Readings" in the Public Schools, they are not likely to secure the confidence of candid and intelligent people.

Rev. Dr. Cochrane, Brantford.

Unless we give up our national and non-sectarian system of education, and erect denominational schools, subsidized by Government, where each church may teach its own creed, and put its own interpretation upon Scripture, I see no better way than that which has been adopted. To name such a retrograde movement is to doom it. No reasonable man would for a moment seriously consider such a proposal.

Mr. W. H. C. Kerr, Compiler of the Selections.

I have had neither time nor inclination hitherto to notice the idiotic clap-trap that has been written to the newspapers on this subject by people who ought to know better. I trusted to the obvious malevolence of the writers being the being the best antidote to their words.

Rev. Dr. Nelles, Principal of Victoria University.

If there be, therefore, any blame to be attached to the Government in this transaction, we of the Churches must share it, and in a matter of this particular kind I think we should take the larger share. But the fair inference seems to be that a work so prepared, so examined, and so approved, is not open to any serious objections, nor the use of it in our Public Schools a ground for reasonable complaint, much less a ground for attack upon the Government.

M'QUADE, THE MODDLER.

He is Greatly Distressed and Shows Signs of Insanity.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—Ex-Alderman McQuade's chance of spending the Christmas holidays in Sing Sing were very bright last evening. Lawyer Newcombe asked District Attorney Martine yesterday afternoon to postpone the sentencing of McQuade until Monday, but he promptly said he could consent to no postponement. Recorder Smyth however complied with the request, and will sentence McQuade at 11 o'clock on Monday. After sentence is pronounced Mr. Newcombe will make application for a stay of proceedings pending an appeal. McQuade passed much of his time in conversation with his wife, his brother Barney, and ex-Ald. Farley. He was so greatly distressed that his friends found is impossible to cheer him up. A rumor had it that he showed signs of insanity. He slept badly and woke haggard and careworn. He received no visitors other than his wife and brother and Alderman Farley.

It was understood that he had little hope that his lawyers would be able to get a stay of proceedings after sentence. If his counsel got a stay and secure his release on bail he will be free until March, 1887, when his case will be passed upon by the Court of Appeals. If no stay is obtained, he will be sent to Sing Sing early Monday morning.

Mr. Newcombe's hope of getting a stay is based mainly upon the objections made during the progress of the trial by Gen. Tracy, who based an objection of some kind upon every available point in the case. The chance of setting aside the verdict on the ground of error will have little effect upon the Court of Appeals.

SAVED BY THE FIREMEN.

A Fire in Copp's Block, Hamilton, Nipped in the Bud.

HAMILTON, Dec. 17.—D. N. Hammond, who has charge of Copp's Block, King-street east, went into the cellar of the establishment of J. H. Johnston, cabinetmaker and furniture dealer, about 9 o'clock this morning, with a plumber,, to attend to some water pipes which had been frozen. They left a lamp under one of the pipes, and went into the cellar under Stevens' picture frame establishment. Returning a minute later they found the place full of smoke. Before they got out of the cellar J. B. Smith from his woodyard office had noticed the smoke issuing from the building and telephoned for the Fire Department. His prompt action probably saved thousands of dollars worth of property. Stowed in the cellar was a large quantity of tow and grasses used in upholstery. This was burning and soon filled the entire building with dense smoke so that the employes had only time to get out the stock of made-up furniture from the show-room. The firemen worked on the burning stuff from the area and soon had the flames subdued. It was entirely destroyed. The smoke filled the passages so quickly that Mrs. Cooney, the caretaker, could not get out of her room on the third flat. She was brought down on a ladder by Fireman Hunting. The building is owned by Wm. Copp and is insured. The damage will be about $250. Mr. Johnson's loss will probably reach $300 or $400, covered by insurance. Very little damage was done to the furniture or the tools, they being removed carefully and kept dry. Mr. Hammond lost his overcoat. Two weeks ago he was burned about the face by the explosion of a lamp while at work at one of the windows in the block.

A MESSAGE FROM A MADHOUSE.

The Sad Story of a Young Victim of Cowboy Brutality.

VINCENNES, Ind., Dec. 17.—A message was received from the Indianapolis Insane Asylum at the home of Miss Lydia Pickell, a day or two ago, which reveals the last chapter of a sad story. The message was as follows:

"Lydia Pickell is lying at the point of death. Come, if you wish to see her alive."

The dying girl lived in Harrodsburg, Lawrence County. She accumulated a snug sum of money, which she was ambitious to invest to the best advantage. She learned that under the homestead laws she could secure a considerable tract of land with her little store of money, and with this thought in view she set out for the West. On her way to her destination she had to travel a long way by stage coach. One night the coach was entered by several drunken cowboys. Seeing a defenceless woman was the only occupant of the coach save themselves they attacked and maltreated her. The girl fatally escaped from her persecutors by jumping from the coach. Three or four days later a woman with most of her clothes torn from her person was found wandering aimlessly about on the prairie. She was found to be hopelessly insane. Fortunately a man from Harrodsburg, who had formerly been a neighbor of the girl, was in the party. He recognized her, and had her taken to the Insane Asylum at Indianapolis. Her mind has never returned, and she is now a hopeless maniac.

THE BULGARIAN TROUBLE.

The Deputation had no Authority to Offer the Crown to Ferdinand.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 17.—The Journal de St. Petersbourg says the offer of the Bulgarian throne to Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, reported to have been made by the Bulgarian deputation, which is now visiting the European capitals, could not have been made seriously. The deputation had no authority to offer the Bulgarian crown, and it is doubtful if anybody would accept the crown under such conditions. It may be that the deputation made the offer tentatively on the part of the present dictators of Bulgaria in order to throw out the idea that they mean to continue to make demonstrations against Russia. The reckless assertion that no power would oppose the election of Prince Ferdinand to the Bulgarian throne is unworthy of discussion.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

WEEKLY DAN'S FLURRY IN THE NEW YORK MARKET.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—Dun, Wiman & Co. will to-morrow issue the following review of trade for the week: The past week has been one of unusual excitement. The sharp decline in the stock market was foreshadowed by the recent unhealthy advance in securities that do not secure, and in some of these the fall was from $20 to $67 per share. But fifteen other stocks lost over $10 per share each, and the average price of active stocks, good and bad, fell $6.30 per share from December 4 to the lowest point on Wednesday last. "Knocking the froth off the market," one broker called it. In that case there was a good deal of froth. Some recovery has since occurred, but it is yet too soon to determine whether the bottom has been reached. It is surprising and creditable that there for only one failure in the Exchange has resulted from such a fall. Money was artificially locked up beyond doubt, and the decline thus increased. The rate rose from 4 to 6 per cent. on Saturday to 10 per cent. as the lowest, and 15 per cent. as the highest on Wednesday. This difficulty has been met by shipments from many interior points (Canada banks sending $6,000,000), by the arrival of $2,400,000 on Thursday from France and the shipment of $2,000,000 from London, and by the Treasury's offer to prepay $5,000,000 interest. The advance in the rate by the Bank of England was meant to check the outflow of gold, but the supply now in sight here and the shrinkage in speculative demands should prevent any stringency in money for commercial or industrial needs if Europe does not unload stocks. So far the Wall-street excitement has no effect on general business. Other speculative markets were neglected and the sales were far below previous records. But while Wall-street speculation do not yet affect general business, the continued depression might in two ways. Failure to sell securities might check railroad building, iron making and other industries. The return of the large body of American stocks held abroad would cause heavy loss of gold and severe pressure. The weather-wise will watch for signs in these quarters. Thus far Europe sends gold and buys stocks.

The issue of silver certificates increases, $3,000,000 more having been put out last week, while the treasury took in $1,500,000 more gold. Risks in stocks by individuals all over the country are likely to increase the number of commercial failures, already unusually large for the season. The situation, therefore, while not now disturbing, justifies caution. The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number for the United States 260, and for Canada 38, or a total of 298 as compared with 274 last week and 242 the week previous to the last. The casualties in the Middle States, Western, Southern and Pacific States are above the average in number, which is also the case in Canada.

THE LOUGHREA EPISODE.

Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien Very Much Disturbed Regarding It.

DUBLIN, Dec. 17.—Dillon and O'Brien arrived here to-day. Both are much disturbed and hurt physically. In addition to the troubles which the gentlemen had yesterday at Loughrea, they met with an accident on the road home. The horse drawing the car on which they were riding bolted, and both were thrown violently to the ground and consider ably bruised.

They Will Continue the Campaign.

DUBLIN, Dec. 17.—Mr. Brady, Secretary of the Irish Parliamentary party, states that a number of Irish commoners have started for Ireland to take charge of the campaign, which they will prosecute vigorously. The Nationalists are laughing at the stupidity of the police in not acting sooner than they did. They might have seized many thousands of pounds by taking action early. Mr. Dillon was confined to his room to-day from the effects of the runaway accident. He looked weak and wearied. He will attend a meeting on Lord Kenmare's estates at Killarney on Sunday. He will announce at a league meeting in Dublin on Tuesday whether or not he will give bail. His friends agree that he ought to give bail, and thereby compel the authorities to try him before his recognizances are estreated. Mr. O'Brien's hands were torn and his left arm sprained in the runaway accident. Mr. O'Brien says that, profiting by old press instincts, when he saw a number of policemen in plain clothing at the Loughrea meeting, he made arrangements for the safety of the documents and money of the league. He intends to continue the campaign with caution and circumspection. He will speak at Longford on Sunday and Sir Thomas Esmonde will speak at Gorey.

Mr. Sheehy Commenced.

DUBLIN, Dec. 17.—During the progress of the meeting at Loughrea yesterday, at which Messrs. Dillon, O'Brien, Harris and Sheehy were arrested, Mr. Sheehy received a summons to appear and show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace, because of a speech he made recently at Kylebeg and which it was claimed was calculated to arouse disorder.

CHURCH IN LABOR.

CATHOLIC PRELATES IN CONFERENCE AT PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 17.—The Record says: An important conference bearing on the relation of the Catholic Church to the Knights of Labor in the United States is believed to have taken place in this city yesterday between Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, and Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, at the residence of the latter. From noon until 5 o'clock the three Prelates were closeted, and at the latter hour Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Corrigan departed for their homes. Archbishop Elder, of Cincinnati, was expected at the conference but he was suffering from pneumonia, and unable to come.

Whatever occurred at the conference is kept a close secret, but it is understood that the meeting was for the purpose of discussing thoroughly the principles of labor unions and labor political movements, with a view of either condemning or approving them, according as they appear to be in conformity with the church. Also that any action that might be taken should be uniform throughout the country.

It is believed that the action of Archbishop Corrigan in suspending Dr. McGlynn formed the leading subject of deliberation.

A prominent priest said last evening, in referring to the meeting, that the labor question was certainly assuming such proportions and drifting into such channels that the church could not very long ignore it. He referred to the interest taken in labor movements, as exemplified by the heavy vote polled by Henry George, and thought Catholics should be advised by their spiritual superiors whether or not it was dangerous to support such movements.

"Of course," he concluded, "no action will be taken by the hierarchy without deliberation on the case, and if any change is made it will be for the best interests of the church and the spiritual welfare of its adherents."

CONVICT LABOR.

Meeting of the National Anti-Convict Contract Association.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—W. T. Lewis of Racine presided at yesterday's meeting of the National Anti-Convict Contract Association, which was held here. Among the letters of regret sent by prominent members of the organization, who were unable to be present, was one from Benjamin F. Butler, in which he says: "If you think my acceptance of the office of vice-president for the State of Massachusetts of the National Anti-Convict Labor Association will do the cause any good, I will accept it, but it will be very difficult for me, with my present engagements, to give much personal attention to it."

D. M. Thomas of Louisville, Secretary of the National Stove Manufacturers' Association; J. B. Winslow of Nebraska, C. Hals of Chicago, Mr. Webster of Wisconsin, Assistant Secretary Mansfield, Mr. Upson of Cedar Rapids and others made energetic speeches in favor of abolishing the contract system in the employment of prison labor, but none of the speakers made any definite suggestions as to what should replace the present method.

Most of them were of the opinion that the convicts should be set to work upon the public highway until every road was macadamized. After several hours' discussion the secretary was instructed to draw up an outline of the object of the association. It was also resolved to send a copy of the bylaws of the association to T. V. Powderly, asking his co-operation through the various branches of the Knights of Labor in the country.

THE FISHERIES DIFFICULTY.

The President Asked to Appoint a Commission to Take Evidence.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—In the House today Belmont introduced the following bill which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs: That the President be hereby authorized to appoint a commission to proceed to such places in the United States or elsewhere as may be designated by the Secretary of State, to take testimony under oath or affirmation in relation to losses and injuries inflicted since December 31, 1885, by the British authorities, Imperial or colonial, upon citizens of the United States engaged in the fisheries on the northeast coasts of British North America. It is said the commission shall everywhere have in respect to the administration of oaths or affirmation and taking of testimony the same powers as a commission of a circuit court.

A Train Bound to Make Up Time.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., Dec. 17.—The Cincinnati express was half an hour behind time this morning and passed through the city at the rate of 40 miles an hour. The statesman at the George-street crossing were not on duty, and the train smashed a wagon driven by Terrence Hickey, aged 14 years. Moses Ryno, an old man of 68, saw the horse and wagon on the track and went to the boy's assistance. The train, however, struck the wagon and threw Ryno off the embankment into Somerset-street, instantly killing him. The horse was carried some distance further and part of the wagon was deposited in front of the ladies' waiting room at the depot. The boy was not to be found at first, but was finally discovered wrapped in a blanket firmly fastened on the cow-catcher. His brains were oozing from his skull and he was dead. Ryno was the father of a large family. He was formerly a policeman.

The Liquor Dealers.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 17.—The Executive Committee of the National Protective Association of Liquor Dealers met yesterday and decided that a moderate license system would be most beneficial to the trade and public, and that it would be to the interest of the wholesale and retail dealers to eliminate fraud in evading the payment of lawful license; also to prevent the sale of liquors to minors; to close saloons on Sunday, and, if possible, to induce municipalities to cease granting licenses to disorderly establishments. The committee held that it was the abuse of liquor that did harm, and charged this mainly to city governments allowing licenses to improper parties.

Imprisonment for Debt.

DOVER, N.H., Dec. 17.—William A. Wooster, a prominent resident of Great Falls, N.H., has been lodged in the County Jail by his creditors. He owes them $6000, and under the State law they can keep him in jail for fifteen years providing they pay his board. Mrs. Wooster, the wife of the prisoner, is worth over $150,000 and would pay his debts, but he will not consent to her doing so. Wooster says he is very comfortable and as times are dull and he is getting old, he can stay there as long as his creditors wish.

BLAKE and LAURIER

AFTERNOON AND EVENING SPEECHES.

Splendid Gatherings on Both Occasions Greet the Leaders.

The Enthusiasm of the Electors—Splendid Gentleman-like Speeches—A Good Hearing Given the Speakers.

Yesterday afternoon Bradburn's Opera House was packed with one of the most intelligent political audiences ever convened there. The gallery was filled with ladies. The hall had been beautifully decorated. Along the gallery was hung festoons of evergreens, and the arches over the pillars were outlined with miniature Union Jacks. From each corner of the hall there converged to the central gasolier festoons of evergreens, studded with roses, and within the spaces formed by these, several lines, hung with the flags of Canada, extended from the walls to the gasolier. The walls were tapestried with flags, and flags were draped over the windows. Over the stage was suspended a shield, surmounted by a representation of the Crown, the shield bearing the gilt initial letters "V. R." Upon tables on the stage were several magnificent bouquets of cut flowers, and a profusion of blooming flowers in pots. A very fine effect was produced by suspending, in different parts of the hall amidst little bowers of little flags, stage heads. The decorations throughout were exceedingly tasteful as well as pretentious.

The following gentlemen occupied seats on the stage: Messrs. Geo. A. Cox, J. H. Stratton, John Hall, Lakefield; W. E. Roxburgh, Norwood; F. Taylor, Lindsay, (Mayor); Andrew McFarlane, Smith; Robt. Kinnan, Wm. Cummings, Emismore; T. E. Fitzgerald, Smith; E. B. Stone, Rev. I. Tovell, Dr. Caldwell, Lakefield; John Cameron, Clement Gordon, Tom. LePlante, Thos. Hallihan, Smith; Major Bell, G. M. Roger, R. Hall, J. Edwards, J. A. Hartley, Noah LePlante, Peter Hamilton, Wm. Yelland, A. Kennedy, R. S. Davidson, D. W. Dumble, R. Gordon, Dr. Massie, Keene; Mr. Barnard, Monaghan; D. Bellegham, Jas. Henry, Wm. Graham, Mr. Gamble, Dr. King, Father Conway, Father O. Connell, Douro; Wm. Walsh, Jas. Crevier, T. G. Hamilton, Jas. R. Hall, M. Miller, J. B. McWilliams, town; Wm. Aldridge, town; Wm. Bogue, town; Wm. Drummond, Otonabee; J. Armour, Thos. Blezard, M. P. P. M. R. Kidd, Dummer; P. Moher, Douro; Garrett Galvin, Douro; A. Clegg, town; A. W. Cox, town; Mr. Walker, town; H. S. Kirby, town; J. P. Hurley, town; Geo. A. Schofield, town; Mr. Barnard, Monaghan; D. Bellegham, town.

The CHAIRMAN said he could heartily join the immense audience present on the auspicious circumstances under which the people were gathered to welcome Hon. Messrs. Blake and Laurier. (Loud cheers.) He referred to the many speakers who had appeared on that platform advocating opposing opinions, they had all been heard respectfully, and he had no doubt that Peterborough would maintain its reputation for order by receiving the speakers of the day with equal attention. (Cheers.) Before they would begin he would call on Mr. Geo. A. Cox.

Mr. COX, who was received with tumultuous cheers, said he was glad to see so large and enthusiastic a welcome extended to the Liberal leaders. He referred to the improved nature of the political meetings of the present day. He thought it was attributable to a gallery filled with ladies (cheers). If the Review were edited by a young lady there would not have appeared in it the scurril can attack upon the Hon. Wilfred Laurier which had appeared, (cheers). Referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway, while he gave credit to the government for its pluck and energy, the chief credit of building a first class road, was due most to the energy of the gentlemen comprising the company, and now that the road was finished it was the duty of the country to see that, the settlement of the lands through which it passed should be properly attended to. While the Government took great credit for the Canadian Pacific Railway, yet when five of the ministers were here the first of this month, they in reference to the Trent Valley Canal. (Cheers.) The Government, in the neglect of this work, were trifling with the highest interests of this county. Hon. Thomas White had accused him (Mr. Cox) of being a protectionist; if he were such, he believed in fair protection in doing equal justice to all industries, so that one class of industries was making 40 per cent., another would be taxed so high on raw material that it would have a struggle for existence. Whatever his position on tais question, he would stick to it both in and out of Parliament. He concluded by calling on the electors for their support, and resumed his seat amidst enthusiastic cheers.

HON. WILFRED LAURIER was introduced and was received with tremendous cheering. He expressed the pleasure it afforded him to appear in Peterborough. He had been greatly misrepresented, and it had been said of him that he had made statements in Quebec that he dared not repeat in Ontario. Any statement to that effect

WAS A DASTARDLY FABRICATION.

He (the speaker) was a man of one speech, and while he was a Frenchman by birth he [illegible] was a Canadian [illegible] and in believed that the charter of liberty of Baldwin and Lafontaine was broad enough to cover all. (Cheers.) He had been accused of saying that "Riel was his brother." That was a pure invention. That statement had been first read by Mr. A. P. Caron, Minister of Militia. (Cheers.) Mr. Caron had made a gallant allusion to the young ladies in connection with the Review, and he, the speaker, believed if that journal was not edited by a young lady, its tone mitigated that it was edited by no gentlemen. (Laughter). He repeated that, as Sir John had imputed, he had called Riel a hero, but he would say so far as he was that he was the champion of oppressed people. At this point one cry of "traitor" was heard, followed by "put him out." "No", said Mr. Laurier, "let him stay, I did not come to convert the just but sinners." (Cheers.) He related the incident of the Earl of Chatham and his assertion that he sympathized with the American rebels, and came could cast an imputation on his loyalty. Loyalty did not mean slavish submission to wrong. (Cheers.) He, the speaker, said he was as as there was in existence. (Cheers.) The French had good reason to be loyal for the British institutions had given them liberties they could not have gained in their own land (cheers) He was called a traitor in Ontario, in Quebec he was reviled by Quebec Tories because he had called the killing of Scott by Riel, a murder. The Tories of Quebec and Ontario stood on equal grounds in their appeals to race prejudice, a most wicked and sectarianism course. (cheers). They were bound to make him a rebel in spite of himself (laughter.) Then the speaker held up a "musket" (a little toy gun) which some good Conservative, he said, had sent him. It was not a very dangerous weapon but he thought that when the Tories had access to so much "boodle" they might have given him a better gun. (Laughter.

The speaker proceeded to show that guilt for the rebellion rested solely with the Dominion Government and not on half-savage halfbreeds whom they had goaded into revolt. The government had denied them their rights for years, but they quickly acknowledged them when demanded with bullets. The government in their treatment of the half-breeds have violated constitutional usage; the right of petition was the highest

PRIVILEGE OF A BRITISH SUBJECT.

The rebellion was wrong and had to be suppressed, but the half-breeds had been petitioning the government in vain for years without result, till the revolt actually broke out. Chiefness had denied in writing that the half-breeds had sent any petition, while the pigeon-holes of his department was stuffed with 70 of these petitions. When Hon. Mr. Blake had wrung these papers out of the government they changed their tune, and said the claims of the Metis were frivolous compared to those of the boodlers whose claims were so generously acknowledged. The half-breeds only asked for a paltry 160 acres and were refused while the boodlers got thousands of acres for the asking. (cheers); the only promise made in the name of the Queen had been violated (cheers). Was it to be wondered at that the half-breeds lost all faith in the government and that they took arms to gain what

WAS DENIED TO CONSTITUTIONAL MEANS?

He charged the government with concealing information from the people We, in old Canada were not generally aware, that as grave discontent existed. In March 7'83. Hon. Mr. Blake asked for papers on the subject of Northwest grievances, and the papers were not produced till May 5th 1885—when the rebellion had broken out—when it was too late for remedial measures. If the government had not wilfully concealed the facts, the people would have demanded remedial measures and the rebellion would not have broken out. Besides, the government had suppressed a large and number of papers—because they would have exposed their guilt.

The halfbreeds simply demanded that they should be treated as the halfbreeds of Manitoba Hon. Mr. White had said that, not one halfbreed had been dispossessed of one inch of land.

But this had not only been done, but the Government policy was such as exposed them eviction one by one. The French halfbreeds had taken up along the Saskatchewan lands 10 chains wide and two miles long, and these half-breeds had settled on these lands. Mr. McKenzie recognized the justice of these claims, but when the new Government came into power the square system of survey was adopted, which put one man's house on another man's farm. The speaker read a petition from Gabriel Dumont and 42 others, praying that they might not be disturbed in the possession of their lands, the refusal of which had led ultimately to MAKING REBELS OF LOYAL MEN.

Would any English people so treated, who had occupied their lands before there was a government, submit to have their homes destroyed? When in 1837 there was grave discontent and the Government surveyors were dividing the lands as they were occupied, an order-in-council came to have the lands surveyed in square blocks. The half-breeds objected, and Father Leduc went to Ottawa and went out a promise that that promise was never kept (cheers). The speaker went on to show cases where the half-breeds had been dispossessed and that they were denied entry for their lands as occupied. There was no evidence of farther evictions, because as he had stated, the government had suppressed the evidence, and refused to bring it down to the house. They dared not do it, for thereby their guilt would be shown (cheers). It would have been cheap justice for the government to have given the half-breeds the rights they were entitled to but they took no action. The half-breeds, despairing of justice from Ottawa sent for Riel, and the government, knowing his dangerous character, still let things drift, neglecting the grievances, and took no action till blood was shed. Mr. Laurier dedicated his bitterest enemy to show by even a single word that he had ever tried to make the issue of the rebellion a race or religious cry. (Cheers.) He simply wanted French Canadians and other Canadians to unite on the ground of community of political sentiment. (Cheers.) The halfbreeds were denied British justice. They were poor and ignorant, but for that reason the Government should not only have been just but generous; they had not even been just, and on this ground he

PRONOUNCED THE GOVERNMENT GUILTY.

(Cheers.) The people had the power of punishing the Government for its guilt in precipitating the rebellion, by relieving them of the power to do further mischief, and this they could do by recording their votes for his distinguished friend, the Hon. Edward Blake, (Tremendous cheers, which were again and again renewed as the speaker took his seat.)

Hon. Mr. BLAKE on rising on rising was received with enthusiastic cheers. He was suffering from hoarseness, as the result of much speaking, and his remarks would be necessarily brief. He had come here, he said, with Hon. Mr. Laurier, in order that the latter could be heard in answer to the misrepresentations and false accusations that had risen against him. In the way of misrepresentation Peterborough was one of the most conspicuous through the conduct of a local Conservative sheet. He referred to the recent visit of ministers, who had promised to do such great things, and had done nothing, for the Trent Valley canal. He was surprised that they had not come to town by way of the canal, by the promise of which they had carried seven or eight seats. (Laughter). At this point an intoxicated person coarsely interrupted Mr. Blake, and on the cry of "put him out" rising, Mr. Blake said, "Don't do that. The worst thing I wish the person is that you may drown him in the Trent Valley canal." (Loud laughter.) Mr. Blake resumed and said that in the absence of the member of the Ontario Government, who could not be present, he (Mr. Blake) would briefly allude to promising, however, that Mr. Mowat was not his lieutenant, as Sir John had recently declared that Mr. Mowat was his. Mr. Mowat was an independent, fearless and, and a true friend of Ontario. Not only had he wisely governed the province, but he had manfully maintained the rights of the province. He had not only to fight the Opposition, but Sir John Macdonald, who had used his first party name influence to try to break him—he had been fighting Sir John, and beating him too (cheers). Sir John was anxious to have Mr. Mowat deposed, for he was a hinderance to his political plans. Mr. Mowat had had to fight Sir John both at the courts and at the elections where all the power of Ottawa was brought to bear to defeat him. All these efforts failing, the Ottawa party now resorted to a cowardly and base system of warfare. A cry of religion and creed was an absurd basis for any party to appeal to public support. The Mail had been diligently sowing d seed for political purposes. If there had been any danger in the legislature of the Mowat Government, to five-sixths of the population from the cradle, the Opposition should have discovered it; that they had not done so showed that they did not do their duty (cheers). The speaker referred to the Separate School system being confirmed by the Confederation Act, and defended the reading of the Bible in the schools. Previous to the adoption of the Scripture Readers in the schools the Bible had only been read in very few schools, now it was read in 96 per cent. If Protestants were true to the principles they professed, they could not fear that their faith would be destroyed by one sixth of the population. (Cheers.) The Liberal party would carry out the principle of civil and religious liberty and freedom of conscience. (Cheers.) Jealous Protestant as he was, he had not the slightest fear of danger from giving Roman Catholics even-handed justice. (Cheers.) He would scorn to gain power by a violation of the principles he professed. (Cheers.)

The speaker would like to deal with numerous important Dominion topics, but time would not permit. He briefly outlined the acquisition of the North-west Territory, the means taken to quiet the Indian and Half-breed title in Manitoba. He showed that in 1878 the claims of the territorial Indians and Halfbreeds were recognized and the Government given full power to settle them. He charged that the Government had neglected the rights of these parties for years, when they might have neutralized the power of Riel for evil by giving these rights. There were 250 Halfbreeds in revolt, yet the Government had, after the rebellion, settled 2,000 claims. Hon. Thomas White had once declared that the action of the Government had precipitated the rebellion—that Riel had thought that the Government smelling of the claims would spell his game and he hurried on the revolt. But he never repeated the statement after he (Mr. Blake) showed that the government did not set till the rebels were in arms. Then in hot haste they issued their commission and did the tardy justice which, if done years before, would have prevented the rebellion. He held the government responsible for all the national disgrace, loss of treasure and life involved in the rebellion (cheers). There had been treason on the banks of the Saskatchewan, and there was treason on the banks of the Ottawa) The Government, in hanging Riel, must have performed a painful duty because it was a consequence of their evil acts. The speaker denounced the race and religious cry raised by friends of the Government to conceal their guilt. He would prefer humiliating defeat to gaining success at the cost of destroying national harmony and sowing discord and strifes among peaceful races. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

The meeting was brought to a close by enthusiastic cheers for the Queen and Messrs. Blake and Laurier.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw41tf

THE DARIEL PLAN.

From the Washington Critic.

A Chicago pork packer, who had once run for Congress, was at the Ebbitt the other day, and a friend met him. "You are out of politics, I believe?" he said, interrogatively. "Yes, I've gone back to my legitimate business." "What's that for?" "Well, I tried both, and I found it so much more to my taste to canvass a ham than canvass a district that I went back to ham."

The Tithe War in Wales.

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from obscure nervous pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's NERVILINE, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but send to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure. 6d50

GRAND REMOVAL SALE. :-: A BOON FOR PETERBOROUGH.

GOUGH

THE WONDERFUL CHEAP MAN'S DETERMINATION.

2,000 OVER-COATS AND 2,000 SUITS,

to be Slaughtered before the First of January, 1887. KEEP IT IN MIND, it is worth remembering, for GOUGH never advertises anything he don't do, and in order that he may open out in his new store with an entire new stock, he will offer SUITS and OVER-COATS until then, (January 1st,)

AT PARALYTIC PRICES

I have completed an extraordinary low purchase of One Thousand Overcoats, which will also be opened out this week, and not having room to show them in my present Store, and in order to avoid the rush, and give every person a chance to secure one, I will open them out in the Store

Next to the "Review" Office.

NEVER IN CANADA
has such a chance been offered to secure an Overcoat so cheap, and other Dealers should take advantage of it, as I am going to sell them AWAY BELOW WHOLESALE PRICES.

THIS IS NO HUMBUG,

as on the 1st Jan'y I move into the Store now occupied by Mr. Carton, better known as the Bon Marche and when I tell you I will, for the next 3 weeks, give you Clothing at Less than Wholesale Prices, I will keep my word, as I kept it when I told you I would throw away 500 Linen Coats from top of the Opera House last Summer. This is and ever will be

Gough's Greatest Offer to the Public

as it is only once in a life-time that a man can stand such a Sacrifice, as I promise for the next 3 weeks only. People will wonder how I can afford to do it, and so as not to deceive them let me here state that I cannot afford it, for cheap as I buy I certainly will not make money during this grand Removal Sale, but my great motive is a Gigantic Advertisement that will ever afterwards

A Row at a Tenants' Meeting.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—The tenants of Baron O'Neill, at Shanes Castle, near Randalstorm, County Antrim, met to-day to discuss the advisability of adopting the plan of campaign. The meeting was lively and troublesome, and a majority of the tenants voted to refuse to pay any rent unless a reduction was made. The meeting broke up in a row, which might have resulted in a riot but for the presence of 130 policemen, who attended the meeting to preserve order. A small minority of the tenants adopted a resolution declaring that Baron O'Neill was an indulgent landlord

The Old Royal Hotel at Orillia Burned.

ORILLIA, Dec. 15.—This morning at 8.30 an alarm of fire was sounded, when it was found that the old Royal Hotel was in flames. The building was one of the oldest in town, part of it having been built forty years ago, and at one time it was one of the best known hotels of the North. The flames made great headway, but owing to the plentiful supply of water they were confined to the building. The furniture was all saved. The building was occupied by Mr. Eaton as a boarding house and was owned by F. Kean. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

England's Cunning Move.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—The Kreuz Zeitung says: As a result of the African delimitation conference England has secured the best route to Victoria Nyanza. From this point of view quite a new aspect is lent to her zeal in preparing for the Emin Bey relief expedition. On the pretence of pursuing a humane purpose the English will immediately show their power in those parts and suddenly take possession of the route leading to the inland lakes.

The British Force in Egypt.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—An intimation has been sent to the Khedive's Government that early next year the British force in Egypt will be reduced to 4000 men, and that no British troops will be stationed north of Cairo.

Fasted for Fifty Days.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—Merlatti completed his fifty-day fast at 6 o'clock this evening. The doctors in attendance gave him a small quantity of specially prepared wine before giving him food.

Boarders in the "Ward of Honor."

BOSTON, Dec. 18.—The executive has dissolved the New Ross Board of Guardians for placing a wing of the Poor House at the disposal of the National League, and for giving evicted tenants a special diet, housing them in a "Ward of Honor" and allowing them the fullest freedom to receive friends.

Dynamite in a School-room.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—Yesterday morning about half-past eleven o'clock, while the mathematics class was in progress in the High School, a loud explosion startled the boys, and it was noticed that the vest of Aimen Dugas, aged 14, a son of Judge Dugas, had been blown to pieces and that his shirt was on fire. The master at once smothered the flames and the boy was sent home, where it was found that he had been slightly burned on the side. It appears that he had a "Flauber cartridge," containing a small quantity of dynamite in his pocket, and had rubbed the same against the desk.

Whisky Wipe Destroyed Outlaw.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.—At the last sitting of the Renfrew County Court five constables were charged by License Inspector McDonald with refusing to serve summonses in Scott Act cases. They pleaded guilty and the prosecutor, not desiring to press for punishment, but simply to make their duty known to them they were bound in $100 each to appear for judgment when called upon. The Faith Cure.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, pin your fate to the "associating oil" or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-steel trusses made in York State, costing me $16. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. E. KIDD.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sure; and 99 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. BLAKE and LAURIER

EVENING MEETING.

Before 7.30 o'clock the hall was crowded to the doors, and those who secured seats were considered lucky indeed. At quarter to 8 the Hon. Edward Blake appeared on the platform and was vigorously applauded.

The CHAIRMAN, Mr. Bertram, in introducing the speaker of the evening, referred to the good fortune of Peterborough electors in having such an abundance of excellent speakers this fall. He then called upon Mr. Stratton, the coming member for the Local Legislature.

MR. STRATTON in rising was loudly cheered. He said it was a great pleasure to him to speak to such a large audience this evening. He was sure they had been pleased with the speeches by Hon. Edward Blake, the honored leader of the Liberal party in Canada, and Hon. Wilfred Laurier. The leading political questions of the day had been ably discussed, and he was sure the electors would go to the polls and return the Reform party to power. In referring to his course in conducting his campaign separately, he justified his action by saying that when the electors come to a political meeting, they come not as general electors but to whoop it up for their own candidates. But let them come to his meeting and listen fairly to his arguments; then let them go to his opponent's meeting, afterwards go to the polls and give their decision. If for no other reason than his position in the Rivers and Streams bill, the boundary question and other provincial matters, it behooved the electors of the west riding of Peterborough to return the Hon. Oliver Mowat, (cheers). The boundary question was touched upon a gross outrage had been attempted upon this Province, an endeavor had been made to deprive her of a large amount of territory which rightly belonged to her. What man was there in the hall who, if encroached upon by his neighbor, was not prepared to go into the courts and fight for his rights? That was what the Mowat Government did, and the decision of the Privy Council of England, the highest court in the empire, confirmed the opinion and contention of Mr. Mowat. It has cost the Ontario Government $76,000 in fighting this matter. As to the Rivers and Streams Bill, it had also been decided in his favor. Then the Separate School law was referred to. His opponent handled the question as though it was fire. He did not care to mention the matter. The question had been ably discussed by Mr. Bertram and other speakers, and the electors who understood the matter were, he felt confident, fully prepared to uphold the Mowat Government. He asked the electors to come out to the polls on the 23th and support a supporter of the country had ever seen. (Cheers.) Notwithstanding the large expenditures made by the Ontario Parliament, they had a surplus of over six millions of dollars. And what had Quebec been doing? Though they had not expended nearly as much on charitable institutions or benefits, they had a deficit of nine millions. And he believed the electors would return him (the speaker) to the Ontario Parliament. (Cheers.) When they had men who managed the affairs of the Province so well, let the electors come out on the 23th and show the Mowat Government that they had confidence in them. He asked his friends and those Conservatives who had a high and patriotic view of politics to work for him and do their best to return him on the 23th. He asked a patient and considerate hearing for Mr. Blake, and sat down amidst applause.

The CHAIRMAN said he believed that the present campaign had developed a public speaker in Mr. Stratton, and felt sure that when he got to Parliament, as he was sure to go (cheers), he would give a good account of himself. The speaker of the evening was then introduced.

MR. BLAKE'S SPEECH.

HON. EDWARD BLAKE, on rising, was greeted with a storm of applause. He regretted that on this occasion he came before them with an exhausted voice, but, as the saying was, a lame horse sometimes warms to his work, and if that was the case he had some chance yet. He had not intended to speak at all upon the question of Provincial politics, but as the Provincial minister (Hon. Mr. Pardee) was absent, and they were on the eve of an important election, he hoped the audience would pardon him for any reference to the matter. Between himself and Mr. Mowat there was a total independence in politics. Neither was guided by the other. Sir John Macdonald, on the other hand, had declared that Mr. Meredith was his lieutenant. Mr. Meredith was plainly guided by Sir John in his actions in the Ontario Parliament. The history of countries in modern times did not show a government with 16 years of office and such a spotless record at its back. What are the charges of the Opposition? There were hardly any charges and not the least proof at all. Take the legislative record of the Mowat Administration. No one would say that its laws were heaven born and perfect, but in all particulars it had a creditable record. No serious charge had ever been raised against it. He came next to a question which had been raised, but which never should have been raised. Mr. Mowat had been engaged in a steady warfare with the Conservative party for the rights of Ontario. In referring to the boundary question, Mr. Blake stated that 14 years ago he gave his opinion on the boundary question, which was practically the same as given by the Privy Council. The end of all the legislation was just what he had offered 14 years ago. Then the question of allowing provincial parliaments to have absolute control of purely local matters was touched upon. Sir John Macdonald tried to disallow the Rivers and Streams bill, a purely local matter, because, in his opinion, the opinion of the great constitutional lawyer, the LAW WAS NOT JUST.

He, the speaker, had faith in the Legislature of Ontario, and if they degraded themselves so far to subserve their opinions to the opinions of 12 men at Ottawa, they would be low indeed Three times they disallowed the Streams bill, because it was so unjust, and then the Privy Council decided that the land given the unfortunate man they were pitying, was his rights. The license question had been iniquitously enforced upon them in spite of their remonstrances, and the people of Ontario had the privilege of paying $150,000 or $200,000 for this bungling piece of legislation. Sir John Macdonald tried to take away the power from Mr. Mowat on the ground that he had abused his privileges. Sir John fought it at Ottawa, and Mr. Meredith, his lieutenant, must, of course, follow a similar course. They were face to face in another way with a much more serious matter. Utterly failing in their attacks upon the policy of the government, they were trying to divide the people upon the religious question. The policy they were thus pursuing was a base and dastardly policy. They had no right to breed discord in the Province. But if they thought the question must be raised, let them do it on the public platform. But it was their press that was doing the work. With reference to the administrative question of the Bible in the schools, Mr. Blake said he had never been more than by the position taken in this matter. A few years ago it was left to the teachers to choose their selections from the Bible. Nobody ever dreamed of reading the whole Bible through. In only about half the schools was it read at all. Then the great Protestant church came forward and tried to remedy the matter. A committee from all the churches met and chose the selections which were referred to the Government and sanctioned. It turned out that the Archbishop of Toronto had actually seen the draft of the selections. It having become known that the chief prelate of the Roman Catholic Church had been consulted, as it to avoid any blundering between the sects which very soon completely Protestantize here to escape ahead of their rights. There are Protestants in the Province of Ontario, who deceive the spread of the gospel, who profess to say that we made a step backward and were much worse off than ever before. Some say our Public Schools were not to be regarded as public schools. He did not believe that. He believed it was better for the country that the people of different creeds and nationalities, should

ASTONISHED AND ANNOYED

RIDDLE AND PUSH FRIENDSHIPS.

This was not to be attempted by coercion. All ages had shown that if a minority, sect, creed or nation were oppressed, the more it would grow. A few years ago, one-fifth of the population of Ontario was Roman Catholic; now only one-sixth were Catholic, and the fears of some people that this minority of one-sixth was to triumph over the five-sixths were absurd (cheers). He passed from the question of provincial politics. He asked first that the electors would rally as they never did before and support the Mowat Government. Now there were a great many questions of Dominion politics which required attention. He did not propose to discuss any seriously, but one. There was the financial question, the question of tariff, the constitutional question of the Senate. The Senate was an anomaly. The members were appointed whether fit or unfit for office, when old age had come upon them, and they were continued in office, fit or unfit, until carried off by death. This Legislative body ought to be made elective by and responsible to the people. Then there was the question of independence of the Commons. There were several other questions which he hoped would be dealt with by himself or others at another date. He came then to the principal question which would engage their attention. At this juncture Hon. Wilfred Laurier accompanied by Mr. Geo. A. Cox, came upon the stage and was rapturously applauded by round after round of cheers.

Continuing MR. BLAKE said it was the GREATEST POLITICAL QUESTION

the government ever had, and the largest administrative question that could be conceived. In the North-west, where it seemed almost impossible that they should tolerate any but the most democratic government, it was nevertheless governed for a time by despotism. The people of the Northwest lived hundreds of miles away from their government. The government declared that they were about to develop that country by better mysteries than ever existed in any country before. And they invited immigration, promising ease and wealth and more rapid advancement than could be got anywhere else. $2,000,000, or more had been spent in administration in the Northwest, and a still greater expense had been the Canadian Pacific Railway, on which $87,000,000 had been expended, much of which had been paid by taxation. The nature of the population of the Northwest was threefold. The Indian from being free, lord of the soil, as he was wont to be, found himself penned up in reservations, his liberty gone, his hunting grounds devastated, and rapidly degenerating through the vices introduced by the white man. Could it be wondered at that the Indians, under these circumstances felt jealous, sour, and injury. But there came upon them, almost with the rapidity of a dream, famine. The buffalo disappeared, and this, added to all his other troubles, was disheartening in the extreme. The half-breed was the instrument by which it could be hoped to move the Indian. He had some of the methods and intelligence of the whites and the confidence of the Indians. The half-breeds could exercise such an

that it was wise to keep them on the side of the whites. The Government of the day was called upon to constitute him as far as justice would allow, and by no means give him any cause of complaint. It was necessary that the Government appointments should be of the best—men of the highest capacity and purest motive. With reference to the half-breeds, Mr. Blake said he would deal only with one grievance. It was called the Indian title. The rebellion of '69, a half-breed rising, took place in Manitoba. A great many concessions were made at that time, one of them being the setting aside of thousands of acres of land for the benefit of the Indians and half-breeds of that province. A communication was sent to the Dominion Government praying for similar concessions for the half-breeds and Indians of the North-West proper. The Government at first took some steps of consideration, but from the year '79 until the rebellion not a single effort at settlement was made. Why? Was it because they were not called upon to do justice? Not at all. The people petitioned, represented, resolved, and sent delegates down; difficulties thickened, and after five years of absolute inaction, an event occurred which should have aroused them to action if anything could. Louis Riel was invited to the country, and he came. The relation of Louis Riel to these people was, in the words of the first minister who, when accused of direlictien of duty, replied; "Louis Riel is the El Mahdi of the half-breeds." The minister went further, and compared him to "Stuart, the leader of the lost cause." This was the man, then, who had come among the Half-breeds and Indians, who were discontented and ready for strife. The North-west Council met and declared, by resolution, that and should be met. So anxious were they to see the wrong righted, that the message was telegraphed the Government. Where was the first minister? In England, performing the first duty of a true Canadian—being knighted. Numerous letters and messages were received by the Government from the North-west, warning them of impending danger—from bishops, Government officials, and white citizens. But these papers were kept from the public on the most flimsy pretences. In answer to all these warnings what did they do? They prepared to pounce down upon rebellion should it show itself, but towards removing the grievances of the rebellion, not a step was taken. At length the outbreak took place. In April, for the first time, they decided to give the half-breeds what they had asked for, namely, the appointment of a commission to settle grievances. Then the rebellion was in full operation, and the Government's action came too late. If the people hadn't arisen, that would not excuse the conduct of the Government. But the Government say, Oh, there were so many claims! True, there were about 2,000 individual grievances. But that only goes to prove how just and widespread were the grievances of the half-breeds. Mr. Blake referred to the statement by Hon. Thomas White that the action of the Government, when it finally did come, actually precipitated the rebellion; that the people had arisen three or four weeks before they intended arising, because Louis Riel knew that his staff of support would be taken away if it was known that the Government were about to really appoint the commission. What words can be severe enough for a government which had acted in this way. Mr. Bleke told the audience, as he had told the government often before, that the government was responsible for shed in the rebellion. They say there was treason on the banks of the Saskatchewan, that he admitted. But if there was, there was treason also on the banks of the Ottawa—not on the part of poor oppressed half-breeds or Indians, but of men occupying the highest places in Canada. These men having powers unlimited, sworn wisely and prudently, honestly and energetically to minister the Queen's affairs, for long years neglected their duty. All the electors can do is to remove from them the powers they have disgraced. But the government did not care to discuss this question at all. They want to get past the cause of the rebellion, past the war itself, and they say Louis Riel was tried and hung, and we ask your approbation for it. He (the speaker) was not going to discuss the question, supposing they were right. They ask the electors to say they have washed away their sins in Louis Riel's blood; that this one act atoned for all their past faults. If there had been no rebellion, there would have been no arrest, no trial, no hanging, and feeding all this hate, the guilt is brought home to the government. They were trying to make a party war in this country through their manipulations. They were not content with the question of race and creed, but were trying to institute an unholy crusade against the institutions of Quebec. He hoped and believed that it may be truly said of the people of Canada that they had passed the age of intolerance, of suspicion, of jealousy. The people would not be led away by these delusive cries. Mr. Blake retired amidst loud and continued applause.

THEIR CLAIMS WERE JUST

HON. WILFRED LAURIER

was the next speaker. On rising he was tumultuously cheered, and began by saying that he was in no fit state to discuss the questions of the day. There was in this city a paper that seemed to be written in pure exuberance. He could tell his audience that he was not half so bloodthirsty as he was said to be. He could tell them that he never tasted English blood. The charge of Hon. Mr. Chapleau, that he was an athlete, he did not consider it necessary to reply to. Mr. Chapleau he knew to be a very religious man—at election times. He (the speaker) was a poor sinner. He compared Mr. Chapleau to the Pharisee who lifted up his eyes at the altar and thanked God he was not like other men. Referring to the paper of which he spoke a while ago, Mr. Laurier said his hearers were, no doubt, aware that it referred to him as a rebel. He was attacked also in the Province of Quebec on this same question, but upon what different grounds. He defended himself against the attacks made upon him by Chapleau, and proved how unfounded they were. Mr. Chapleau's organ, La Minerve, stated that he (Mr. Laurier) had contended that the execution of Scott by Louis Riel was no murder. That was false. He had always been of the firm belief, and had expressed himself so, that Scott had been murdered.

Referring to the fear that the Roman Catholics were

of Quebec, he said if they were being tyrannized over by anyone, it was by the allies of the Mail and not by the men of his religion and creed. Upon the Northwest question he had taken a strong ground. He had condemned the government in the strongest terms, but the charge that he tried to rouse religious or national feelings over the rebellion, he denied most emphatically. Whenever he spoke on that question he told his hearers again and again, as British subjects, that the government did not treat the halfbreeds as British subjects. That was the only ground he took and always would take. In referring to the attempt to organize all Catholics as one single party for political purposes, Mr. Laurier read an extract from one of of his own speeches made in Quebec, in which he expressed his opposition to such a measure as being contrary to the best interest of the country and liable to sow seeds of discord. He was a Frenchman, and was proud of his race; but putting all other questions aside, he was a

CANADIAN BEFORE EVERYTHING.

(Applause). He didn't hesitate to admit that on the Northwest question he had taken a strong ground, but it was not the tie of blood that impelled him to act as he did; it was his duty and his pleasure to stand by his fellow countrymen. He had been taunted with disloyalty, but he said without hesitation that there was not among the Conservatives of Ontario a more loyal man than himself. (Applause.) His people to-day were loyal to the Queen, and they could not forget that under the British flag they found more liberty than if they had remained in France. (Loud cheers.) If there was a rebellion in the Northwest it was because the Government did not give the inhabitants the rights to which they were entitled. He thanked them for the hearing given them, and sat down amidst cheers and tumultuous applause.

Mr. Laurier was the recipient of several handsome bouquets at the conclusion of his speech.

Cheers were given for the Queen, Mr. Blake and Mr. Laurier, after which the meeting dispersed.

THE FRENCH ADDRESS.

The old Music Hall was beautifully decorated, for the occasion of Mr. Laurier's address, with evergreens and bunting. Over the platform was the motto, "Honneur a notre Compatriote." On one wall "Dieu et Mon Droit." "Vive le Canada." On the other, "L'Union fait la Force." The hall was well filled, large numbers of ladies being present. Mr. N. T. Laplante occupied the chair. Mr. Laurier was splendidly received, and loud cheers accompanied his address, which was substantially the same as that delivered in the afternoon. He, however, contrasted the financial administration of Ontario and Quebec under Reform and Conservative rule greatly to the credit of the former. He closed by a reference to the race and religious cry. While the Mail in Ontario was vilifying the French and denouncing the Roman Catholics, Sir John and Mr. Chapleau were all "sucres." The electors had now heard both, and they were now in a position to denounce the Government on the rebellion issue. The meeting closed with rousing cheers for the Queen Hon. Mr. Laurier.

CANADIAN LITERATURE.

George Stewart Lectures on the Subject at the N. Y. Canadian Club.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—At the fortnightly series of entertainments at the Canadian Club last night, Geo. H. Stewart, editor of the Quebec Chronicle, read a paper upon the literature of Canada. The attendance was large. Mr. Stewart's paper was a modest presentation of the subject, which greatly interested his auditors. The statements that the output of Canadian authors was indicated by 3000 volumes sent from Canada to the Colonial Exhibition was received with pleased surprise. Erastus Wiman presided, and in warm terms thanked the lecturer for a great treat afforded to the Canadian Club and its guests.

A Duel With Swords.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—A duel with swords was fought yesterday morning in Humboldt Park. A little before 7 o'clock two closed carriages entered the park through the south entrance. Each carriage contained a principal with his second, and a surgeon. They were driven to the western end of the park, where they alighted and concealed themselves behind a clump of trees. The arrangements being completed, the principals each drew a shining sabre and the contest began. Soon both were wounded. One received a sword thrust through the breast, and his opponent was cut across the face, and will probably bear a scar for some time.

With this drawing of blood, the duelists seemed to be satisfied, for they quickly got into their carriages and were driven to the nearest drug store. There the wounds were dressed. Circumstances point to the editor of a Pharmaceutical journal and a young medical student as the principals. It is said the cause of the affair was a dispute as to the hand of a young lady. A park policeman was a distant spectator of the fight, but was too dumbfounded to interfere.

NEARING THE END

THE CAMPBELL DIVORCE CASE DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The end of the Colin Campbell divorce case is in sight. The brevity of the speeches of the counsel for the co-respondents seems to indicate confidence in acquittal. Mr. Finlay consumed all day yesterday with his closing argument against Lady Colin—a speech of marked ability, rising to the full license of a lawyer in dealing with awkward facts, and full of ingenuity, and unmeasured invective and bitterness. Sir Chas. Russell replied on the whole case to-day. The Judge, who has made no secret of his disbelief of the main evidence against Lady Colin, charges the jury on Monday, and a verdict is expected the same day.

Sir Charles Russell, counsel for Lady Colin Campbell, made his closing argument to-day. He said he knew that Lord Colin Campbell charged his wife with adultery, but he had been unaware, until he heard defendant's counsel making his closing argument, that the husband also charged his wife with perjury. Lord Colin and his counsel had displayed an acrimony unparalleled. If their charges against Lady Colin were true they would place her on a level with the commonest prostitute. Lord Colin was only the youngest son in the Argyll family, although Mr. Finlay appeared to think with another Campbell, who, when the Marquis of Lorne married the Princess Louise, exclaimed: "Eh, mon, the Queen must be a proud lady to-day."

Continuing, Sir Charles said it was absurd to suppose that Lady Colin, if guilty, would have brought her charges against Lord Colin into court, when by accepting his request to cohabit she might have shielded her guilt and prevented inquiry. The whole case against Lady Colin, he said, rested upon the gossip of servants, cabmen and stablemen.

A CHICAGO DIVORCE CASE.

Herbert Ayer's Wife Tells the Court of the Wrongs Done Her.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Harriet Hubbard Ayer, at one time the most prominent society woman in Chicago, applied to Judge Garnett to-day for a divorce from her husband, Herbert Ayer, the noted iron founder. She said that she was married to Ayer in Chicago on Oct. 2, 1866. They lived together as husband and wife until the month of October, 1882, when the final separation took place. It was about that time that the rich iron firm of Brown, Bonnell & Co., at Youngstown, O., of which the defendant was a member, became bankrupt. Mr. Ayer then left his accomplished wife, saying that business interests required his presence in Europe. The gossips at the time whispered, however, that the real object was to meet a handsome and somewhat notorious Chicago adventuress, who had taken up her residence in Paris. These rumors reached the plaintiff at the time, and she said she had instituted inquiries for herself and discovered that Ayer had been traveling through France with another woman, who lived with him as his wife. Here Mrs. Ayer became convulsed with sobs and nearly broke down. Continuing her story in a broken voice she said that Mr. Ayer had lived with the woman for some time. Since she had heard from him in this way he had returned to America, but had never been to see her. She had made frequent appeals to him for support since he left her, but had never received any response. In reply to the court's enquiry as to whether she had made any overture for a reconciliation, Mrs. Ayer replied, with the tears springing to her eyes: "No, sir. I could not under the circumstances." Ayer had promised $900 per month for the support of plaintiff and her two daughters, Harriet, aged 19, and Margaret, aged 16, but he utterly failed to keep his promise and Mrs. Ayer had been compelled to earn her own living and support her children.

THE OLDEST INHABITANT.

A Negro Woman, Said to be 136 Years Old, Dies in the Indian Nation.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 19.—A letter from Sasakawa, Seminole Nation, Indian Territory, gives an account of the death there on Dec. 5 of Mrs. Susanna Warren, perhaps the oldest person in the United States, if not in the world. She was born in the old town of St. Augustine, Fla., in 1750. She was born a slave and was the property of a Spanish master, until 1818, when she, with other Spanish slaves, fled from the Pensacola where it was taken by Gen. Jackson. She lived in the Seminole Country from then until the second treaty of peace with the Seminoles, when she was reclaimed as their property by her master, who had followed her. [illegible] Mrs. Warren was 136 years of age.

TIGHTENING SCREWS.

THE GOVERNMENT GIVES THE COERCION MACHINE ANOTHER TURN.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Government have at last struck, and struck hard. Their Liberal opponents in England denounce the arrest of Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien, and Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien are of the same opinion. English Liberals have once more to choose between disagreeable alternatives. They have been taunting the Government with want of courage of their opinions; they now find it awkward to condemn them for doing what they, the Liberals, have said they were bound to do. The Daily News gets out of the difficulty by an article of which the first half is for the maintenance of law and the second half for the defence of the league. But Mr. Gladstone's tardy hint has gone unheeded. Sober Liberals shrink from resistance to the tribunals, no matter what justice and equity may be on the side of those who come into collision with the forces of order. The English constitutionalists cannot yet be made to understand the doctrine on which the "plan of campaign" is based, as caution is the watchword of Liberal journalists and orators.

"Now that war has been declared in Ireland," says the mouthpiece of the Tory ministry, "it is to be waged unrelentingly all along the line." This is something more than a rhetorical flourish and means that the active party in the Cabinet has carried the day. The arrest of Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien at Loughrea was made in pursuance of a resolution taken before Mr. Dillon's prosecution was begun in the Queen's Bench. The Government are really going to try conclusions with the league. They have been told that they shrank from jury trials, and they respond by issuing summonses against six leaders of the "plan of campaign" for conspiracy. These proceedings must end in a regular trial and verdict. The league seems quite ready for the contest, in spite of Mr. O'Brien's rather equivocal remark that his friends "don't mean to put their heads into the lion's mouth." The presence in Dublin of Mr. Jenkinson, the head of the criminal investigation department in London, implies a great deal.

The "Campaign" Proclaimed.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Irish Executive has formally proclaimed the anti-rent campaign. This action is accepted by the leaders of the National League as a step on the Government part towards the suppression of the league. The funds of the league have already been transferred to France in order to prevent their seizure by the authorities, and the rent moneys deposited with trustees will also be secreted to guard them against Government designs.

The proclamation warns all persons that the inciting of tenants to refuse to pay or withhold rents on illegal and not legal the anti-rent movement, by whatever means carried out, is a criminal conspiracy. In addition it says that all moneys, contracts or documents given or received for the purpose of such conspiracy are liable to seizure, and that persons in whose possession the same are found shall be accessories. The sweeping terms in the proclamation of Lord Ashbourne, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and assented to by Lord Carnarvon, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, were read in the House of Lords yesterday afternoon. Lord Granville said he feared the Ministry would be compelled to ask Parliament for more coercion. He [illegible] will carry peace until the spending of Parliament, when early action can be taken for the suppression of crime, and to remedy the defects in the coercive legislation. In the meantime, however, the Ministry agree with Lord Salisbury in the importance of preserving the law, the immediate enforcement of which is necessary, and expressed the hope that the Irish people in Ireland if the language of Irishmen to-day reflect the sentiments of the anti-rent movement.

The Government Defied.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—At a demonstration held last night in Kilrush, County Clare, in favor of the "plan of campaign," Jeremiah Jordan, Parnellite member of the House of Commons for West Clare, and Mr. Joseph Richard Cox, Parnellite member for East Clare, both defied the Government to do its worst by arrests and coercion against the plan. These gentlemen openly declared that the "plan of campaign" would be vigorously carried out. Under the heavy Vandaleur estates in County Clare upon which the tenants are now on the "No will bring to the estate to-morrow," cried one of the orators, "by collecting his rents." Mr. Kenny, member of Parliament, also spoke, and said the Vandaleurs had been murderers over since 1641.

Another Clergyman Arrested.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—Wm. O'Brien, who is now in Dublin, to-day received a summons similar to the one served on him at Loughrea, to appear here and answer to another charge of "conspiracy to defraud." The alleged conspiracy to demand reasons in exceptions to arrears for rents, the refusal to pay rents fixed by land courts, and to hold as if the Government were powerless. Under the "plan of campaign" by arresting the trustees under it in every instance whereon they accept refused rents. The new summons is answerable next Wednesday. Messrs. Dillon, Redmond, Crilly, Harris and Sheehy, all Parnellite members of Parliament, were also served with fresh summonses to-day. They are to appear on Thursday.

"Soldiers of Kilkenny."

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—A meeting is to be held at Kilrush to protest against Vandaleur's eviction processes. The call for the meeting is printed on handbills and concludes as follows: "People of Kilkenny! At the most important crisis in our country's history you are invited to become soldiers of Ireland under the banner of the National League."

THE BULGARIAN TROUBLE.

A Paris Paper Reports an Alliance Between Germany, France, Russia and Turkey.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—The Journal des Debats publishes a despatch from Berlin stating that Germany, France, Russia and Turkey are in accord on the Bulgarian question.

The despatch adds that Turkey is to continue to have the initiative in advancing proposals respecting Bulgaria, and that the three other Powers named are to accept the proposals as made, but does not say whether or not there is to be a previous understanding as to the nature of what will be proposed.

In addition to the foregoing the Debats' telegram contains the statement that Germany advised Austria to join in supporting Turkey's proposals, and refused to guarantee her against the consequences of a double-dealing policy.

The Panama Canal.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—M. de Lesseps, at a meeting of the French Geographical Society, declared that the Panama Canal would be open for traffic in 1889, but that there will not be time in the interval to construct the locks. "Panama," M. de Lesseps declared to the society, "can be made later, the essential point being that shipping will pass through the canal in 1889."

The Ocean Steamship Rate War.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—The Cunard Steamship Company to-day announced its intention of reducing its cargoing steerage rates so as to conform with the action of the other lines. The American mails next Saturday, and the steerage tickets are now being sold for $15. It is said that a lively cut rate will follow.

High Licenses to Hotelkeepers.

HALIFAX, N.S., Dec. 18.—The high license law has just been put into force in this city. Saloons are entirely abolished and nothing but hotels and clubs allowed to sell liquors, and these must not sell less than one quart, and hotels only to guests. The result is that two-thirds of the drinking places are closed.

The Ste. Marie Bridge.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—A communication from the Chief of Engineers was to-day transmitted by the Secretary of War to the House, stating, in answer to the resolution of [illegible] that the estimate of the cost of the bridge across the St. Mary's River at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., is $1,000,000. The bridge is to be built by the Canadian Government, and the United States will only have to pay its proportion of the cost of the approaches on the American side. The bridge will be a railroad and wagon bridge, and will be built on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

"THE BOY, O, WHERE WAS HE?"

The Conservative candidate for the West Riding has been making a great parade, over the action of the Mowat administration and its supporters in the matter of the amendments to the address in reply to the speech for the throne last session in reference to the Northwest Rebellion. It is well known that amendments were proposed to the address by Mr. Meredith and his followers, having for their object the whitewashing of the Dominion Government, in the matter of their guilt for causing the rebellion. Because the legislature refused to prostitute its functions to this end, the Government and its supporters are denounced as sympathizers with rebellion. In this connection it will be interesting to note the course of the Conservative candidate for West Peterborough in the matter. A careful search of the journals of the House, shows that his name does not appear in the list of any of the three divisions taken on the amendments. Mr. Carnegie actually shirked the vote, for which he is now both in his paper and on the platform so hotly and hypocritically denouncing his opponents and particularly Mr. Blezard. It may not be out of place, to inquire of him the hero of the firebrand party, as was inquired of the hero of "the burning deck." "The boy, o, where was he?" Without irreverence it is suggested that the following words are pertinent to the occasion, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone."

THE OPERA HOUSE DEMONSTRATION.

The immense gatherings which packed the Opera House on Friday afternoon and evening, at the enthusiastic Reception given to Messrs. Blake and Laurier were practical refutations of the slanders and false charges which have been poured upon, especially, the Quebec Liberal leader. His speeches on the occasion, were particularly interesting, because they utterly removed the grounds on which the baseless charges of disloyalty and disaffection were founded, and still more because they brought home the guilt of the Dominion Government in causing the North-West rebellion, as it has never been brought home to the intellects and judgments of the people of Peterborough. Both the speeches of Mr. Blake and Mr. Laurier were decisive on this point. The fear that this would be done accounts for the feeble and futile efforts by certain base persons, led by a person who claims to be nothing if not a gentleman, to prevent free speech and free discussion. It is a pleasure, however, to know that these attempts do not receive the countenance of respectable Conservatives, who show that they do not take "much stock" in the attacks upon Mr. Laurier, in which he is called "rebel", "traitor," "perjurer," and so on through the vocabulary of vituperation. All these cries are raised to obscure the real issue. If the Dominion Government and its satellites can, by exciting race and religious prejudices, distract public attention from their iniquitous course of Northwest mis-government, they hope to evade condemnation. But they cannot hope anything in this direction from those whose eyes were opened to the real facts of the case by the able and argumentative addresses of Hon. Messrs Blake and Laurier, in the Opera house last Friday.

To the Taxpayers of the Town of Peterborough.

I wonder how many of you realize that the town elections are near at hand, and that you will have to elect new councillors to transact your business for the ensuing year, and I wonder how many of you have thought how necessary it is to select the best men for that position. No doubt some of you have done so, but I will venture to say that a very large majority of you have never given this matter the least consideration. You pay taxes and you complain that they are so high, but you do nothing to counteract this evil, and thus you go on from year to year, paying taxes and complaining and doing nothing. It is almost always the case when a large number of people are called upon to do anything of a public nature, each one of them says he will let his neighbor look after it, simply because he is too lazy and too indifferent to look after it himself, although he is just as much interested, and perhaps more interested than his neighbor; and thus has arisen the old saying, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. But is it not reprehensible how it comes to pass that the affairs of our town of Peterborough, is suffered to go on according to the will of a few officials, no matter whether for good or for evil, and especially in this case where the great body of the ratepayers is so active and so intelligent as they are here. Ambitious men, who want office, calculate upon this indifference, and oftentimes say, that they they are pretty sure of success, and as a rule I am sorry to say, this is true, and the trouble does not stop here, for nothing is so contagious as an

and not asking to vote, simply because the electors do not like to return, and sometimes because they are defeated by the result, and think the trouble of going pays them [illegible] an appointment by the Reform ; and they never stop to ask themselves whether he is the right man in the right place, and whether he has any personal interest in obtaining office, or whether he will do his duty honestly and without fear, favor or affection. Councillors know that, when once elected they are safe from public criticism for another year, and that they can snap their fingers at the people and flout them as they like. And they know, moreover, that if they do wrong, the electors will forget it before the approach of another year. And they know, too, that the people seldom attend the meetings of the council and really know very little of what is going on. And then absurd assumptions and money is wasted, and the taxes are increased year after year, and when the taxpayer wonders how it is so, he has no means of information unless he inquires of somebody else or asks the councillors to explain, and, of course, the explanation will be made to suit the circumstances, and be so made as to throw the voters off their guard. I will venture to say that if the people knew the ins and outs of things, and knew what some very few know, they would act very differently and be inclined to raise a little rebellion. But they don't know, and apparently they don't want to know, and they pay their taxes and threaten that they will do some wonderful things at another election, and having thus grumbled, they feel better, and then in the same way and then complain again. What should be done to keep the people posted in the doings of the council is, for each ward to appoint a committee of three intelligent men, whose duty it shall be to attend all meetings of the council and report monthly to them the doings of the council. In this way the ratepayers will know what is going on and which councillor fails short of his duty, so that at another election they can elect better men. And these committees will act as a check upon the councillors and make them do right. There is no other way that I can see for the people to do. And these committees can be changed every three months or so, and others can take their place, and thus bear their share of the burden. It is a pity they had not done this last year and the year before, because, if they had done so, I will venture to say they would make certain changes at the coming elections which now they probably will not make, but which they ought to make. I believe the people are beginning to see the evils of the existence of the Nicholls' Hospital. They may know a little about it, but it is only a little, and they may thank the tax collector. I wish they knew the whole. This attention has been called to this matter by the demand for their taxes to help keep it up, but if it were not for this demand, I don't suppose they would trouble to themselves much about it. I am glad that there is one way by which to stir the ratepayers up and compel them to feel that they have got something to make them think, and not only to think, but to act. They don't want this hospital themselves and they will never use it, but they have got to pay their money to keep it up chiefly for the use of strangers. Are the ratepayers willing that this shall be so? And are they willing that they shall be forced to contribute, out of their scanty earnings, to feed and care for people who are just as able to take care of themselves as many are? If they are not willing to do this, now is the time to say so. If they let the town elections pass over as they have hitherto done, putting men into the council who will wink at abuses and thus force their support upon the people, then the people are justly punished, because they have no one to blame but themselves. Are they willing to deny themselves and their families, in order to pay their hearty means to the Nicholls hospital, to keep up a costly staff of servants and officials, and to support outsiders and strangers contemptly every day? If they are willing, then let them elect the same councillors for another year and they will be satisfied. But if they are not willing, now is the time to say so, and they must show their feelings by having out of the council next year some men who are there now. No doubt you will ask who these are, but my business is to show you some of the abuses which affect you, and not to enter into personalities where I can help it. But it is in my place to tell you that two of the councillors are trustees of this hospital, which every one complains of; I don't think they can fairly find fault with me for doing that. If anything in the hospital has gone wrong, it was their duty to prevent it. They and the other trustees purchased, without lawful warrant, some two thousand dollars' worth of costly furniture for this hospital. They and the other trustees built a costly and they supply the hospital with medicines and with provisions and other supplies without tender. Do you think they ought to be placed in the council for another year? kept there to waste your taxes and to compel you to pay away, and I may say to throw away, your money for no earthly good, and which you want yourself. The ensuing election will tell. And there are others in the council who have condoned these things, and who ought to be made to feel that they cannot do so with impunity. No meeting of the hospital trustees has been called for the last eight months, and I suppose that that means no meeting was ever called until a few days ago. I had thought that this was the fault of the chairman, but I am now told that it is the fault of the secretary. I am informed that the cost of this hospital for this, its first year, is five thousand dollars. But the council, fearing that this would be too much for the people to bear, placed three thousand of it upon the roll of taxes this year and reserved the other two thousand for next year, when it and the then current years' expense of the hospital will be placed on the roll, and which cannot amount to less, all told, than four or five thousand dollars, including improvements to premises. If this hospital is not, in the meanwhile, finally got rid of, your taxes next year will be worse than this year. It can be got rid of if your council ask Parliament, at its next session to repeal the act passed respecting this hospital and to give the trustees power to reconvey the property again to Mrs. Nicholls, and then, when this is done, you and I will be free. Free Trade.

LET THINGS GO ON ANOTHER YEAR

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain at the same size. 2eod

The tremendous demand for Wood's Quaint Syrup is evidence of its great worth. Try a bottle and you will not be disappointed. Two doses relieve. Sold by all druggists. 52

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Mandal looked astonished. "Months must have passed," he objected. "Surely, after that lapse of time, Mrs. Linley must have been safe from discovery."

"Take your own positive view of it! I only know that startling happened. And why not? The luck had begun by being on our side—why shouldn't the other side have its turn next?"

"Do you really believe in luck?"

"Devoutly. A lawyer must believe in something. He knows the law too well to put any faith in that; and his clients present to him (if he is a man of any feeling) a hideous view of human nature. The poor devil believes in luck—rather than believe in nothing. I think it quite likely that accident helped the person employed by the husband to discover the wife and child. Anyhow, Mrs. Linley and Kitty were seen in the streets of Hanover; seen, recognised, and followed. The courier happened to be with them—luck again! For thirty years and more he had been traveling in every part of Europe; there was not a landlord of the smallest pretensions anywhere who didn't know him and Miss him. 'I pretended not to see that anybody was following us,' he said (writing from Hanover to relieve my anxiety); 'and I took the ladies to a hotel. The hotel possessed two merits from our point of view—it had a way out at the back, through the stables, and it was kept by a landlord who was an excellent good friend of mine. I arranged with him what he was to say when inquiries were made; and I kept my poor ladies prisoners in their lodging for three days. The end of it is that Mr. Linley's gentleman has gone away to watch the channel steam service, while we return quietly by way of Bremen and Hull.' There is the courier's account of it. I have only to add that poor Mrs Linley has been fairly frightened into submission. She changes her mind again, and pledges herself once more to apply for the divorce. If we are only lucky enough to get our case heard without any very serious delay I am not afraid of my client slipping through my fingers for the second time. When will the courts of session be open to us? You have lived in Scotland, Randal——"

"But I haven't lived in the courts of law. I wish I could give you the information you want."

Mr. Sarrazin looked at his watch. "For all I know to the contrary," he said, "we may be wasting precious time while we are talking here. Will you excuse me if I go away to my club?"

"Are you going in search of information?"

"Yes. We have some inveterate old whist players who are always to be found in the card-room. One of them formerly practiced, I believe, in the Scotch courts. It has just occurred to me that the chance is worth trying."

"Will you let me know if you succeed?" Randal asked.

The lawyer took his hand at parting. "You seem to be almost as anxious about it as I am," he said.

"To tell you the truth, I am a little alarmed when I think of Catherine. If there is another long delay, how do we know what may happen? Before the law has confirmed the mother's claim to the child? Let me send one of the servants here to wait at your club. Will you give him a line telling me when the trial is likely to take place?"

"With the greatest pleasure. Good-night."

Left alone, Randal sat by the fireside for awhile, thinking of the future. The prospect, as he saw it, disheartened him. As a means of employing his mind on a more agreeable subject for reflection he opened his traveling desk, and took out two or three letters. They had been addressed to him while he was in America by Capt. Bennydeck.

The captain had committed an error of which most of us have been guilty in our time. He had been too exclusively devoted to work that interested him to remember what was due to the care of his health. The doctor's warnings had been neglected; his overstrained nerves had given way, and the man whose strong constitution had resisted cold and starvation in the arctic wastes had broken down under stress of brain work in London.

This was the news which the first of the letters contained.

The second, written under dictation, alluded briefly to the remedies suggested. In the captain's case the fresh air recommended was the air of the sea. At the same time he was forbidden to receive either letters or telegrams during his absence from town until the doctor had seen him again. These instructions pointed, in Capt. Bennydeck's estimation, to sailing for pleasure's sake, and therefore to skipping yachts.

The third and last letter announced that the yacht had been found, and described the captain's plans when the vessel was ready for sea.

He proposed to sail here and there about the channel, whatever it might please the wind to take him. Friends might accompany him, but not in any number. The yacht was not large enough to accommodate comfortably more than one or two guests at a time. Every now and then the vessel would come to an anchor in the bay of the little coast town of Sandycoal, to accommodate friends going and coming, and (in spite of medical advice) to receive letters. "You may have heard of Sandycoal," the captain wrote, "as one of the places which has lately been found out by the doctors. They are recommending the air to patients suffering from nervous disorders all over England. The one hotel in the place and the few cottages which let lodgings are crammed, as I hear, and the speculative builders are turning his operations at such a rate that Sandycoal will be no longer recognisable in a few months more. Before the crescents and terraces and grand hotels turn the town into a fashionable watering place, I want to take a last look at it as it was in my childish days—old aspect. If you are inclined to wonder in my feeling such a wish as this, I can easily explain myself. Two miles inland from Sandycoal there is a lonely old moated house. In that house I was born. When you return from America write to me at the postoffice or at the hotel (I am equally well known to both places), and let us arrange to meet there. I wish to revisit the old scenes, and see me in my birthplace. It was sold, years since, under instructions in my father's will, and was purchased for the use of a community of nuns. We may look at the outside, and see, if we please, the present mistress of the old house. In my recovery the one is my old friend and the other is my sister."

These last lines were added in pencil. "You may have heard my name [illegible] Westerfield."

[illegible]

[illegible] have been known to me but for you. I feel sure that you have good reasons for not divulging the name of the man who has ruined her, or the address at which the two are found. But you may one day be at liberty to furnish your witness. In that case don't hesitate to do so because there may happen to be obstacles in my way. My determination discourages me when my end in view is the saving of a soul in peril."

Randal consented, in his turn, to put the case entirely aside. He had only time for an hour's exercise when the servant returned with the lawyer's appointment answered. Mr. Sarrazin's terse note communicated in these cheering terms:

"I am a firmer believer in luck than ever. If we only make haste—and won't I make haste!—we may get the divorce, as I calculate, in three weeks' time."

CHAPTER XXX.

Mrs. Linley's application for a divorce was heard in the first division of the Court of Session at Edinburgh, the lord president being the judge.

To the disappointment of the large audience assembled, no defense was attempted on the part of the husband—a wise decision, seeing that the evidence of the wife and her witnesses was beyond dispute. But one exciting incident occurred toward the close of the proceedings. Sudden illness made Mrs. Linley's removal necessary, at the moment of all others most interesting to herself—the moment before the judge's decision was announced.

But, as the event proved, the poor lady's withdrawal was the most fortunate circumstance that could have occurred, in her own interests. After condemning the husband's conduct with unsparing severity the lord president surprised most of the persons present by speaking of the wife in these terms:

"Grievously as Mrs. Linley has been injured, the evidence shows that she was herself by no means free from blame. She has been guilty, to say the least of it, of acts of indiscretion. When the criminal attachment which had grown up between Mr. Herbert Linley and Miss Westerfield had been confessed to her, she appears to have most unreasonably overrated whatever merit there might have been in their resistance to the final temptation. She was indeed so impulsively ready to forgive (without waiting to see if the event justified the exercise of mercy) that she owns to having given her hand to Miss Westerfield at parting, not half an hour after that young person's shameless forgetfulness of the claims of modesty, duty, and gratitude had been first communicated to her. To say that this was the act of an inconsiderate woman, culpably indiscreet, and, I had almost added, culpably indelicate, is only to say what she has deserved. On the next occasion to which I feel bound to advert her conduct was even more deserving of censure. She herself appears to have placed the temptation under which he fell in her husband's way, and so (in some degree at least) to have provoked the catastrophe which has brought her before this court. I allude, it is needless to say, to her having invited the governess—then out of harm's way—then employed elsewhere—to return to her house, and to risk (what actually occurred) a meeting with Mr. Herbert Linley when no third person happened to be present. I know that the maternal motive which animated Mrs. Linley is considered, by many persons, to excuse and even to justify that most regrettable act; and I have myself allowed (I fear weakly allowed) more than due weight to this consideration in pronouncing for the divorce. Let me express the earnest hope that Mrs. Linley will take warning by what has happened; and, if she finds herself hereafter placed in other circumstances of difficulty, let me advise her to exercise more control over impulses which one might expect perhaps to find in a young girl, but which are neither natural nor excusable in a woman of her age."

His lordship then decreed the divorce in the customary form, giving the custody of the child to the mother.

Great credit is due Mr. George Walker and his able staff of assistants who designed and executed the decorations of both the halls Friday. The superintendence of the street decorations was in the hands of Mr. D. Bellegham, assisted by an able staff under the forewomanship of Mr. Wm. Bellegham. Under the direction of Mr. Frank Hewitson, the floral adornments were beautifully arranged. The decorations on the whole surpassed anything of the kind ever before attempted in a political demonstration.

A noticeable feature of the demonstration was the length of the procession which escorted the Hon. Edward Blake and Mr. Laurier from the station, and the ease and rapidity with which the vehicles were got in line. The arrangement of the procession was under the supervision of Mr. D. Bellegham, Dr. Bell and Mr. D. McDougall. The energetic efforts of the latter gentleman towards securing a large and representative attendance at the meetings were most successful, for which he deserves much credit.

All fair-minded citizens will contrast the Tory rowdyism manifested at Mr. Blake's meeting with the respectful hearing accorded Sir John Macdonald by Conservatives and Reformers alike. At Mr. Blake's meeting the rowdy element, under the leadership of a prominent Tory who professes to be a "gentleman," was the cause of much annoyance, not only to the speaker, but to all honest and honorable men. Many Conservatives were disgusted with the rowdy tactics of the lower element of their party.

It is to be noted in connection with the attempt to create a disturbance in the Opera House Friday afternoon, that one of the most attentive listeners to the addresses of Hon. Messrs. Blake and Laurier, was a Conservative gentleman. That he was a gentleman is shown by the fact that, though his blood was shed at Batoche, and that though he had proved his loyalty by other means than "cat calls" and alcoholic interruptions at a public meeting, he did not feel called on to feel it his character by refusing courteous attention even to the arguments of his political opponents.

The Reform Committee desire to express their hearty thanks to the ladies who assisted so materially in rendering the floral decorations such a splendid success.

Mr. Laurier received a perfect shower of roses and bouquets from the ladies in the gallery and in front of the stage. The ladies were completely captivated by Mr. Laurier's prepossessing appearance, winning address, and forcible expressions of honest belief.

At the conclusion of his speech Friday night, Mr. Blake was the recipient of a beautiful floral wreath from an enthusiastic young lady admirer.

Will the Review presume to call the ladies, who were such enthusiastic admirers of Mr. Laurier, rebels and outlaws?

The decoration committee are greatly indebted to Mr. J. J. Turner, town, who supplied the flags and other decorations, and whose experience and hearty personal assistance contributed largely to the success of the handsome decorations throughout.

Sunday Sparks.

About four o'clock Sunday afternoon some straw in the cellar of Mr. John Donovan's residence and shoe shop on Simcoe street, next Dunn's hotel, became ignited through a defective chimney. Mr. and Mrs. Donovan were sitting in the house reading at the time. In a few minutes the fire brigade was on hand and quickly subdued the flames. More damage was done by the crowd in removing the household effects than by the fire. The building was rough cast once, owned by Mr. Geo. McComb. The damage, slight, was fully covered by insurance.

About 11:30 Sunday night the firemen were again aroused by an alarm of fire; this time in the new brick building on Dalhousie street, owned by Mr. Matthew Wright, of Wright and Payton, pump manufacturers. The fire started in the kitchen, and before it was extinguished did about $60 damage. The firemen, though, deserve credit for making a speedy turn-out, having water playing in the blaze in a few minutes from the first alarm. The building was ready for occupation, and Mr. Wright had his household furniture packed and ready for removal to the new home this morning. Mr. Wright will continue in his present premises for some time yet. It is conjectured the fire was started by tramps, as on several occasions members of that itinerant brotherhood have been found inside snugly curled up in the shavings enjoying a peaceful slumber. There had been no fire in the house since Saturday night, when Mr. Wright, who had been doing some graining, extinguished the fire and locked the doors. The loss is covered by insurance. Mr. Wright is entitled to a large amount of sympathy.

Church Chimes.

The volunteers, about 180 strong, had church parade to St. Paul's church yesterday forenoon, Rev. Mr. Carmichael, of Norwood preaching the sermon.

Rev. Dr. Barwash, Dean of the Faculty of Theology in Victoria University, and Rev. John Potts, D.D., of Toronto, secretary of the Educational Society of the Methodist Church, preached in the Methodist churches here yesterday to large and interested audiences. Both ministers are excellent speakers, presenting facts and expressing opinions with the utmost clearness and precision. Rev. Dr. Barwash, at the Charlotte street church last night, spoke strongly in favor of the University Confederation scheme, and asked, on behalf of the educational fund, half a million dollars from the Methodists of Ontario. The Presbyterians had invested in educational interests $1,500,000; the Church of England, $1,200,000; the Roman Catholic Church has spent an enormous sum, not definitely known, in the cause of education; while the Methodist Church had scarcely $700,000. Years ago when there were in the whole Province of Ontario but 60 ministers and 11 000 members, the sum of $10,000 had been raised with ease; to-day, when the church has 1,600 ministers and 160.000 members, the sum of only half a million was required. Rev. Mr. Wallace stated that the collections and subscriptions in the morning realized $130. while last year the church had given $176.

A Fact About Fires.

Strangely, but nevertheless truly, a fire, though apparently a source of loss to the insurance companies, is in reality their gain. A fire will set men thinking deeply as to the risk they run in leaving their premises uninsured, and the result is that many are convinced of the folly of such a course, and at once rush to the agents to take out a new policy or renew old ones. Sunday's fires have already done their work. Several agents around town have done a rushing business this morning.

A First-Class Company.

The Woodward Dramatic Company at the Opera House—Two Weeks' Engagement.

Lovers of the drama for the next two weeks can have their hearts' fill of their favorite pastime. A rare opportunity for gratifying the longings of dramatic taste is afforded in the coming two weeks' engagement at the Opera house of the Woodward Dramatic Co. Mr. Woodward, who was last year connected with Day's International Company, is so well known to Peterborough that his first-class ability as a comedian needs not be commented upon. Miss Eugenie Lindeman, the leading lady, is a charming actress of sprightly manner and theatrical grace, fully capable of leading the necessary support to an actor of Mr. Woodward's calibre. Of the company perhaps the Brockville Times says: "Mr. Woodward has gone to a great deal of expense in getting actors to suit the many different parts which have been produced by the company since their arrival in Brockville. They supported themselves in a manner which merited repeated bursts of applause, but were far themselves great favorites in the eyes of the theatre-goers of the town of Brockville." To Mr. Jamieson, the competent and obliging manager, much of the financial success the company is meeting with, is due. The Woodward Company is deserving of every encouragement. To-night will be presented "Queen's Evidence," a drama of unusual merit, abounding in thrilling situations and dramatic climaxes. The casual look scene is something original as well as startling. Prices, 10, 20 and 30 cents.

A PRETTY DARK-EYED WIDOW

A Rich Man's Son Elopes with Her and in Consequence is Arrested.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—Frank B. Miller, a wealthy young society man of Troy, N.Y., was arrested to-day in this city at the instance of his father for eloping with Susan Mooney, a grass widow, who is employed in the collar factory of the elder Miller. The couple were apprehended as they were walking up Broadway and were taken before Justice Duffy who discharged the woman but held Miller to await his father's arrival. Mrs. Mooney protested strongly, but in vain, against being separated from her lover. Despite her pleading to be permitted to remain with him, he was led off to a cell and she was forced to return alone to the hotel at which she had been stopping. The elopement has created a great deal of excitement in Troy, where Frank was considered a desirable parti, because of his wealth and social standing. Susan Mooney, the woman in the case, is a daughter of William Doran of Pittsfield, Mass. She left her husband there about two years ago and went to Troy with her child and secured employment in Miller, Hall & Hartwell's factory. She is very pretty, with bright black eyes, and has fascinating ways. Frank Miller was infatuated, and much of his leisure time was passed at Mrs. Mooney's house. Justus Miller learned of his son's infatuation, and did all in his power to put an end to the acquaintance, but without success, and Frank Miller is alleged to have said that the "old man" was trying to drive him to the wall, but he would not be able to do so.

London Money and Stock Market.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—During the past week discount was unsettled, and the recent keen demand lessened yesterday when the quotations were 4½ and 3¾. During the settlement the stock exchange loan rate ranged from 4, to 3. It is expected that rates will advance under the influence of the drain of gold to New York, combined with the decreasing reserves of the Bank of England and the narrow resources of the open market. After a general fall on the Stock Exchange prices yesterday closed steady. There was a severe shrinkage in English railway securities during the collapse of American railways, but yesterday there was a decided recovery and the position is now felt to be sounder.

Where is Evan?

[Epistle to the Bard of Loch Fyne, Evan MacColl, Kingston, written in consequence of getting no word from him for six weeks after writing to him. By Dr. Massie, Keene, Ont.]

Say, Stapleton tell us where is Evan?
Why hasn't a post passie heaven?
And is he still among the livin'?
Or planed upward,
Has taen a flight and awa heaven,
There sing eternal?

Or if within your bounds you find him,
A' bruised and broken ahlfu' bind him;
Or sick, or sair, O! carefu' mind him,
Thy darling chiel!
And dinna let him look behind him
Until he's weel.

But if he's gane, ah, woes is me!
Has like we never mair shall see.—
Nae servile, whinging coof was he,
Lo'e by a string.
But noble, gentleman, fearless, free,
His mang he'd sing.

Heck, sirs! we hardly could bide loss him.
For should ye a word vindictive toss him,
Or any hardie dare to boss him,
Clean gyte he'd set her;
The deil himsel' he dour'd a cross him.
Faith, he ken'd better!

Let ony man, o' any station
Brat wisk at friend or wrong the nation
E'en gowd nor place, twas nae temptation
To sic a chiel,—
He'd shortly settle their creation,
And drub them weel.

Or let them say't be high or low,
Auld Scotia ever was the foe
That laid her in the dust fu' low.
Rig tat rih nee him!
Professor George still rues the blow
MacColl did gie him.

In history in Fiction's grip,
Dear Fatherland let your bloodhounds slip,
Crack goes his castigating whip,
With patriot scorn!
Masculay laid up a his hip,
Amidst the corn.

Dese English critic measaly itch,
To cast old Cassin in the ditch,
And trail his lau-gin through the pitch
Of mind benighted;
Our bardie gies his luxe a twitch
And sees it righted.

In a' this warld, there's no a skellum,
Nor ae sly self conceited ballum,
But Evan lad, wad bravely tell 'em,
The honest truth;
Even, if he kend that they should fell 'im,
Withouten ruth.

Ye feathered things in mournfu' tune,
Come join my wasconne, doleful croon;
Ye dogs that bay the silv'ry moon,
Your sorrow show it;
And a' ye tearfu' ete as shoon,
Bewail our post.

What though this grasping world, and hard,
May barely grant him just reward,
Still shall his genius blissful starred,
Edu gent shine,
And endless praise the bard
Of fair Loch Fyne.

VERDICT: NOT GUILTY

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE IN THE CAMPBELL DIVORCE CASE.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Sir Charles Russell concluded his argument for Lady Colin Campbell in her divorce case against her husband to-day. The Judge summed up and came up the case. He said Lord Colin Campbell denied his wife's charge of infidelity, which depended chiefly on the testimony of Lady Miles. Whatever might be said against Lady Miles by the defence, it must be admitted that she was until lately Lord Colin's friend, that she had done all in her power to discourage the bringing of the action against him and that she only took Lady Colin's part when she became convinced that unjust charges were to be brought against that lady. The testimony given by the doctors that Mary Watson was virgo intacta did not negative the testimony of Lady Miles that she saw Lord Colin and the girl in such a position as to warrant the belief that the pair were guilty. Suspicion, however, the judge said, was insufficient. If adultery was not proved as a fact the jury were bound to find as a fact that Lord Colin was innocent. At the last trial, in which Lady Colin secured a decree of separation, it was shown that Lord Colin had given the plaintiff a disease in such a manner as to amount to the cruelty which she alleged as the basis of her petition for separation. In the present case the evidence against Lady Colin depended on what the family servants said. This should be received with suspicion. In regard to the Purfleet incident, the judge said there were so many important elements of mistaken identity that the jury would be compelled to carefully consider whether additional evidence had been adduced to reliably establish the statement that the lady who [illegible] with [illegible] Purfleet was Lady Colin Campbell.

Referring to the allegations concerning Lady Colin's [illegible] Court, the judge said they all depended again on stories told by servants, and particularly on those told by Rosa Bear. Her own witness describe her as a chatterer. She had contradicted herself, and other witnesses had contradicted her on important points. She at first swore that the Duke of Marlborough and Lady Colin occupied the same apartment for an entire week at Leigh Court, but afterward she contradicted that. The Duke of Marlborough was at Leigh Court only two nights. The judge declared he believed Rosa Bear had invented the story about Lady Colin and the Duke of Marlborough sitting together, like lovers, on a beach in the Paddington station.

Lord Colin's conduct towards his wife while she was in Paris, on the occasion when he telegraphed to the Paris police to arrest her and lodge her in a prison for fallen women, Justice Butt characterized as outrageous, remarking that he never had known anything more dishonest than Lord Colin's allegation to the Paris officials that his wife was living in open adultery with one of the co-respondents and should be arrested and treated as a common woman of the town. The story told by the manservant, O'Neil, that he once saw through the keyhole of the dining room at Cadogan place Chief Shaw and Lady Colin in a compromising situation, the judge said he could not regard with favor. The jury must consider whether O'Neill's letter to Lady Colin, after his discharge by her, seeking re-employment, was not an attempt at blackmail, and the jury should further consider the question whether Chief Shaw's testimony in denial, as the statement of a distinguished public official, was not worth as much, if not more, than the statement of such a person as O'Neill. Gen. Butler, the Court thought, should have come into court and given testimony as to his innocence, but as long as he chose to remain away there was no power in England to compel him to come. It would, however, the Judge said, be impossible to exaggerate the meanness exhibited by Gen. Butler, if he was innocent, in remaining away from court, because in so doing he deserted Lady Colin. But the judge told the jury they must not take Gen. Butler's absence as evidence of guilt on either his or Lady Colin's part. Replying to a question of a juryman the judge said that Gen. Butler was beyond the jurisdiction of the court and that a subpœna could not compel him to attend and testify because, being made a co-respondent, he was protected by the clause of the law which makes it impossible to ask an incriminating question unless the witness was a voluntary one.

The case was then given to the jury and they retired. After a short absence they returned and reported that they could not agree upon a verdict. The disagreement of the jury was not final. They retired to reconsider the case and returned at 10 o'clock with a verdict that Lord Colin Campbell had not committed adultery with any of the co-respondents. The jury added a rider that the conduct of Gen. Butler was unworthy of a gentleman and an officer, and had caused the only difficulty which the jury experienced in reaching a decision. The announcement of the verdict was received with applause.

HAMILTON AFFAIRS.

Meeting of Presbytery—Fined For Abusive Language—A Turkey Raffle.

HAMILTON, Dec. 20.—A meeting of the Presbytery of Hamilton was held in St. Paul's Church School room this afternoon to consider the call from the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, New Westminster, B.C., to Rev. Thomas Scoular of Erskine Church, this city. Rev. Mr. Fisher presided. There was a very large number of the members of Erskine Church present. Rev. Dr. Reid urged the acceptance of the call on behalf of St. Andrew's Church, which, he said, had a membership of 168 with 80 families on the roll and was rapidly growing. They had agreed to pay Rev. Mr. Scoular's expenses and give him $1500 a year as well as a new manse. They were very anxious for Mr. Scoular to accept the call and that gentleman has it under serious consideration.

John Harris was before the Police Court today charged by his wife with using indecent and profane language. The parties live at 227 Macnab-street. The defendant was fined $2 and costs and bound in sureties of $200 to keep the peace.

On Friday night there was a raffle for turkeys at William Verral's shop, 144 John-street north, at which eleven birds were disposed of. During the night thieves made a raid on the turkey pens in Verral's back yard and were about depleting the flock when young Verral came upon them and they took to their heels. Two young men, O'Day and Brown, arrested on [illegible] charge, and were brought before the Police Magistrate to-day, but as there was no evidence against which to hold them they were discharged.

NOVA SCOTIA'S WONDERFUL SNAKE.

A Missing Farmer is Supposed to Have Been Swallowed by It.

CANSO, N.S., Dec. 18.—Hundreds of men are engaged searching for Farmer Cavener, who has been missing a fortnight, and have failed to find any trace of him. He left his house at dusk. His daughter heard him calling for help from the woods adjoining the house. She went to the door and shouted in reply, but could not understand where he was, although his cries and groans were distinctly heard. She ran to neighbors for help. Meantime darkness and a snow storm set in. The whole district was aroused next day and the woods for many miles thoroughly scanned. The general opinion is that he has been swallowed by a huge serpent and taken into the lakes. An eye-witness of reliability said that while recently coming to Canso he saw something which appeared to be an old dry log across the road, but when he came near to it the reptile, whose head was on one side of the road and its tail in the woods on the other side, gave two or three sweeps with its tail and darted into the forest, making the brush crack. The body seemed to be the size of a barrel and its length from twenty-five to thirty feet. It had a ferocious-looking head. The serpent has long been a source of dread to the people in that locality.

THE SHOOTING OF HADDOCK.

Little Hope of Securing the Assassins of the Protestant Clergyman.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Dec. 18.—The confession attributed by the reports to Grenda and his wife, who were captured at Kansas City for the murder of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, is sweepingly denied by them. They reached here in charge of the sheriff at noon to-day. At the jail Grenda solemnly asserted that the whole report was a falsehood and that he never made any confession to the officers at Kansas City. With a great deal of profanity he declared that they have used [illegible] to [illegible] him [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1886.

AN EXPLODED CRY.

Hon. Wilfred Laurier is a British subject, a member of Parliament, a Privy Councillor. If he is, as is asserted "a rebel, and a perjured Privy Councillor," why doesn't the government take some steps to have him suitably punished? But he is neither the one nor the other, and no such attempt would succeed. But he is a thorn in the side of the Dominion Government, he is exposing the guilt of the government in causing the rebellion, and that is what hurts. He is taking the edge off the race and revenge cry, and that is a crime; he is showing that our French fellow citizens are not thirsting for the blood of English speaking Canadians, and that is something that doesn't suit the programme of the Francophobe political platform. And there is other evidence to show that the Mail and its allies have not stirred up that discord between whom has been their object for months. A French journal in Montreal, in which it is said Mr. Laurier has an interest, has been the first to suggest an English speaking Mayor for Montreal, and the French are heartily supporting the proposition. In the Witness appears a largely signed requisition, French names largely predominating, asking an Englishman to be a candidate for Alderman for St. Gabriel's Ward. French domination doesn't seem to take a very aggressive and dangerous form in Montreal.

UNFAIR AND MISLEADING.

The Toronto Mail with that uniform unfairness which has characterized its sectarian crusade, publishes a report of the grants made last year to charitable institutions to attempt to show that institutions under Roman Catholic control were unduly favoured in the matter of grants. The bare figures show some apparent ground for this contention. The total grants to Protestant institutions amounted to $30,115,33 and to Catholic institutions, amounted $30,664,39. But it must be observed that these institutions of both kinds receive grants something on the principle on which aid is granted to schools, that is, in proportion to the work done. Both classes admit Protestants and Roman Catholics on equal terms. A summary of the statistics for the year 1885 shows that in thirty-five Protestant or non-Catholic institutions 7,071 inmates put in 582,760 days and earned a grant of $30,115, which amounts to an average of $3.50 for each inmate, or 10¼ cents per inmate per day; while in 27 Catholic institutions 4,968 inmates put in 611,573 days, and earned a grant of $30 003, which amounts to an average of $7.36 for each inmate, or a little less than 5 cents per inmate per day. Thus is disposed of another of the fire-brand organ's false charges of favoritism on the part of the Mowat Government. And investigation shows the other charges of this character to be utterly baseless. The Mail's "no Popery" howl is very much overdone, and everybody knows and believes it is raised for pure political purposes. The very articles of the Mail, painting in such terrible terms the dreadful danger of Roman Catholicism to the state, are written by a Roman Catholic.

The Toronto Trades and Labor Council, at a largely attended meeting Friday night, passed the following resolution by a large majority:

That this Council hereby expresses its total want of confidence in the usefulness and impartiality of the Labor Commission recently appointed by the Dominion Government, and recommends that members of labor organizations throughout Canada decline giving any evidence before the same while the name and person of Samuel R. Heaton is continued thereon, and that a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to Sir John Macdonald.

Heaton is one of the most blatant of the professional Tory spouters in the present political campaign in Toronto.

Rev. John Burton, of Toronto, the well-known Congregationalist clergyman, writes as follows of the Scriptural Readings now used in the Public Schools: "I rejoice to know that 30,000 children of Papal parents mingle with the children of their Protestant neighbors, sit at the same desk, play on the same ground, hear the same lessons, read from the living Word. Would that the oneness were universal amongst us. But this, to me, senseless irritation now being incited, seems to be paving the way for still greater separation, when Anglican, Presbyterian and Methodist will all claim their own, and the bitterness of religious alienation cause. I pray God avert this contingency, and I venture another suggestion: ... 'Blessed are the peace-makers, ... be called sons of God.'"

"What I say not first even three or four times in my discourse. I took Burdock Blood Bitters for ... I took, the cure is perfect. I ... Sold by ... Toronto, Ont. 2w51d

The Toronto Mail strives to make it appear that the Division Court Clerks are "Mr. Mowat's paid retainers." This is a most absurd charge. The Division Court clerks, with whom the people of this town are familiar, can by no means be accused of being paid retainers of the Mowat Administration. The organ must be hard set for argument when it quotes so frivolous and unfounded a charge.

The Detroit Evening News, which cannot be accused of any partizan bias, speaking of Mr. Blake at Windsor, says: "There were none of the clap-trap arts of the ordinary stump speaker in his manner or in his speech, but every utterance showed the keen reasoning and persuasive logic of the trained lawyer, for Mr. Blake's reputation in his profession is as great as his political fame."

Money to be Made.

It is said that dull times are not known by the agents for the great publishing house of George Stinson & Co., of Portland, Maine. The success of this exceptional success is found in the fact that they always give the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present we understand, their agents are doing wonderfully well on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co. undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being away from home over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time, or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co. guarantee grand success to all who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain all here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the disease make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw51f

A Seasonable Hint.

During the breaking up of winter, when the air is chilly and the weather damp, such complaints as rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat, croup and other painful effects of sudden cold, are prevalent, it is then that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is found truly valuable as a household remedy. 2w51d

Broken Down.

"Being completely broken down in health I was induced to try that valuable remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters. One bottle made me feel like a new man, restoring me completely to health." Geo. V. Detlor, Napanee, Ont. 2w51d

Now received, a large variety of the Willard Tract Depository Publications, consisting of Illuminated Scripture Text Books, Scripture Cards, and a general assortment of Books, Cards, etc., etc. J. Erskine.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is speculated by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns, from the tender aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painless corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, does not go feeling around a man's foot, but gets to business at once, and effects a cure. Don't be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Get "Putnam's," and no other. 6d51

Invisible but Instantaneous.

All pains or aches will be instantly removed by a few drops of Fluid Lightning applied over the affected parts. No time lost; no nauseous medicines needed; no poultricing or using greasy liniments. It will not blister or discolor the skin. Sold at 25c. per bottle by John McKee, druggist. Sufferers from Neuralgia assure us that they never fear it when their house contains a bottle of Fluid Lightning. eodw51

Sir William Vernon Harcourt has given up his total abstinence ideas, and now takes a good deal of wine for his stomach's sake.

Important News Item.

Cookstown.—Mrs. Campbell had been troubled for a number of years with Indigestion and Constipation, and was induced to try McGregor's Speedy Cure and found it all that was needed, and would recommend its use to any person similarly troubled. This invaluable remedy is sold in every part of Canada at 50c. and $1 per bottle. eodw51

The History of Hundreds.

Mr. John Morrison, of St. Anns, N.S., was so seriously afflicted with a disease of the kidneys that dropsy was developing and his life was despaired of. Two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him after physicians had failed. 2w51d

It Seldom Fails.

WINTER SIGHTS UPON THE NEVA.

Every year, at the beginning of January, a number of Samoied families—tribes inhabiting the shores of the Arctic ocean—make their appearance in St. Petersburg, bringing some thirty or forty reindeers and a dozen roughly-constructed sleighs. They erect a tent upon the banks of the frozen Neva, and near it corral their reindeers with a simple rope guard. Their object is to furnish sleighing parties with the rare sport of riding after the winged-footed Siberian deer. Their costume is well adapted to their home in the icy zone. Over a common shirt is worn a suit made of reindeer skins, consisting of a baggy pair of pantaloons and a jacket, the hairy side of the skin being outside. The jacket, which reaches nearly to the knee, is buttoned up behind. The cap of deer skin is well wadded and ornamented with long fur ear-laps. Their high and roughly-constructed boots, also of deerskin, reach to the knee, and have thick soles. The effect of this picturesque garb is destroyed by covering it with a long, common cotton print gown, well wadded and quilted, with sleeves so wide that no movement of the arm is discernible.

Their sleighs consist of a box, about three feet wide and seven long, resting upon pegs about three feet high, fitting into wooden runners, which turn up in front to the height of four or five feet and end in sharp points. A light stick serves as the whiffletree, which is fastened to the runners. Reindeer skins cover the board seats, and reindeer skins cover the patronizing public. During the time not engaged the deer stand upon the ice, warm and panting, with their tongues hanging from their mouths, indicating that even a St. Petersburg winter is tropical to them. Their harness is also composed of the skins of the reindeer, and remind the spectator of a mule harness in old plantation days, with the exception that strips of hide take the place of corn-stalks. No traces are used, but a strong strap attached to a ring in the collar and brought between the legs of the deer is fastened to the whiffle tree.

A Russian agent is employed as interpreter, and standing at the side of the Arctic vehicle he invites the curious public to take a ride on the Neva, for a small consideration—which is not so small after all. When a number of patrons are secured the sleigh is brought up, a Samoied seats himself on the right side, takes his long line in one hand, a willow rod in the other, and signifies his readiness to start. One such ride generally satisfies [illegible]

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-less trusses made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spirial Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sure; and 95 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless contrivances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. A Surprise Party.

Thursday night last about thirty-five young personal friends of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mason made a summary and unexpected call upon them in their new home on Barnardo avenue. Well provided with lodging baskets of tantalizing edibles, the party completely surprised Mr. and Mrs. Mason, who had not the slightest inkling of the affair. It was, however, pleasing to be remembered even in this unlooked for manner, and it is scarcely necessary to add that a most enjoyable evening was spent. Mr. and Mrs. Mason will long remember the occasion which proved to them that they had true-hearted friends who delighted in showing their friendship and esteem.

Forged a Note and Skipped.

One day last week a laborer in the employ of Mr. Thomas Irwin presented an order for $6.75 to Mayor Stevenson for payment. The order was cashed, and shortly afterwards the man returned with a similar paper which Mr. Stevenson refused to accept until he had seen Mr. Irwin. On speaking to Mr. Irwin of the matter, the latter denied any knowledge of the order, declaring it had not been written by him or at his instance. The order was then discovered to be a clever forgery. It is known that the forger bought a ticket to Toronto, and the police of that city have been put on the track of the fellow. It is to be hoped he will be captured and brought to justice.

Germany and the German People.

The Young Men's Christian Association are to be congratulated on the array of talent they have secured for their course of "popular talks." The second "talk" was given last night by the Rev. F. H. Wallace, B.D., on the above subject, and proved to be very entertaining and instructive. A description was given first of the cities and the magnificent scenery of the Empire. The people, with their language, their character, their manners and their customs, were fully dwelt upon. The grand universities and education generally, and the state of religion, came in for a good share of attention. The lecturer showed how that in social and religious life the people were progressing, and thought that there was a bright future in store for the nation. Englishmen, he said, should not forget how much they owed to Germany. Our origin, the Protestant reformation, the printing press, scientific and philosophical truth, are among the things for which we owe the German nation. At the close of the lecture a vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Orr Bennett, B.A., seconded by Mr. D. B. Gardiner, and was warmly carried by the audience. The chair was filled by Mr. G. M. Rogers, who, in tendering the vote of thanks, gave some of his own German experiences.

The Late Dr. Burritt.

The announcement that Dr. W. H. Burritt died at his residence Water Street this morning will be received with general regret and sorrow. Dr. Walter Horatio Burritt was born in the township of Marlborough, county of Grenville, on Sept 10th, 1809. The place of his birth now called "Burritt's Rapids" was on Rideau river, and was named after his father and uncle. Dr. Burritt began the practice of his profession at Smith's Falls about 1835. While there h took a leading part in municipal matters. He was a councillor for five years and a school trustee for twenty years, and a coroner for twenty-one years. In 1870 he removed from Smith's Falls to Peterborough. Dr. Burritt was married to Miss Schofield, of Delta Leeds, and of the union seven children were born. The eldest is the wife of Lieut.-Col. H. C Rogers, postmaster; Horatio Charles is practising medicine in Toronto; James Henry is practising law at Pembroke, and the three surviving children reside in Peterborough. In religion Dr. Burritt was an adherent of the Church of England, and in politics a Conservative. In his profession he was skilful and successful, and in private life his many good qualities won him great respect and esteem. The funeral takes place from the family residence on Thursday next, at 3 o'clock p.m.

To the Taxpayers of the Town of Peterborough.

"I don't believe there ever was a time when the electors should be more careful in the choice of councillors than at the elections next January. The town's affairs are in no means in the most satisfactory condition, and a great deal of the money of the ratepayers is being mis-spent. These are matters that I cannot enter into in detail. It is sufficient for me to tell you that you cannot be too careful whom you select for your councillors next year. I have said enough to put you on your guard, and that is sufficient; the rest is for you. It has been currently but quietly reported that Mr. Hendry, on behalf of the Ashburn mills, is going, if councillor next year, to try and get those mills for another ten years. They have already been exempt for the last ten years, and they received in addition a bonus of two thousand five hundred dollars in money; altogether a bonus of very nearly twenty thousand dollars, and this, too, in face of the fact that the proprietors of those mills bought up the whole property for five cents on the dollar. And now they would like you to give them some fifteen thousand dollars more. The business of the mills have been most profitable to them, but still they want you to give them more. They are always crying for more, like the sand in the desert which drinks up the water and always asks for more. If you are wise you will pledge your councillors against giving them any more of your money. Mr. Menzies is known to be opposed to giving more, and so we hear that a combination is being formed to keep him from re-election and to get a more willing man in his place. See to it that this is not done, and show your appreciation of Mr. Menzies' honesty by electing him with an overwhelming vote. On the whole Mr. Menzies has been a good councillor and you ought to stand by him, as I hope you will do. There is another old councillor who ought to be re-elected. John McNaughton has long served the ratepayers, and he has done so honestly and to the best of his ability, and always found advocating the rights of the people. He may not be a very highly educated man, but he is an honest man, and it would be ungrateful not to put him back into the council again. I am glad to hear that Mr. J. L. Hughes has been asked to allow himself to be put in nomination for the South Ward for the coming elections. Mr. Hughes is an honest, active, energetic and intelligent man and his presence in the council at this time would do much good. If the electors study their own interests they will choose Mr. Hughes by a handsome majority, and they will thereby show that they mean to have good representatives in the council for the coming year, and they will not be disappointed if they elect him. Last year John Douglass was not returned, for some unexplained reason the ratepayers were induced to leave him at home. I hope he may be induced to run again, and that he will be elected. Mr. Douglass is an industrious, plain, good common sense man and would be sure to make a good councillor. He is not a pretentious man, but he is made of the right kind of stuff and may be depended upon. From all I know of Mr. Kelly I should say he is a good councillor. And the ratepayers may do worse than elect him. He is decidedly the best of the councillors for Ward number two. Mr. Stinson tells me he is a candidate also for this Ward and you will know what I think of him when I tell you that I am going to vote for him.

FURTHER EXEMPTED FROM TAXATION

But the most important part of the council is the office of Mayor. He, by virtue of his office, has the general outside of the council, and it is in his power to do much good or much harm. It is highly necessary therefore that the people see to it that we have a good Mayor. I have had special opportunities during the present year of knowing a good deal of what Mr. Stevenson has done in his capacity as Mayor, and I don't hesitate to tell you that he is the right man in the right place, and to ask you to put him back there again. I know that Mr. Stevenson has made enemies for himself, because he did his duty faithfully. I would consider it a misfortune for the town not to have him Mayor for the coming year, when so much will depend upon having a good man in that position.

And now we have several councillors upholding this Nicholls hospital, two of them, as I have already told you, being trustees. Do you think those men can be depended upon to assist you in getting rid of the burden of keeping up this hospital, and that they will if they get in the Council again, employ their energies to get rid of it? I am credibly informed one of them has said he will not, and I think the same may be said of the others. And don't you think that your safest way to do, and to do, will be to elect entirely new men in their places, whom you know will be on your side in those matters, and work as in all general matters of economy in the town, and who will try to reduce, and greatly reduce, the taxation of the town below its present amount of fifty seven thousand dollars. An outrageous taxation for a small town like ours. You must understand that if you neglect the present opportunity of securing justice and economy your chance will be gone for another year, and that you will have to be content with the evils which may be inflicted upon you. Now is your time, and it is now or never. And remember that self preservation is the first law of nature. I must now conclude. This letter is very long, but in question to myself, I could not make it any shorter. It is an unpleasant duty to have to speak of old acquaintances and friends in an apparent unfriendly manner, of people that I meet almost every day and for whom I personally entertain high respect. I have put nothing down in malice and I hope that we will all be friends still. I have done what I consider to be my duty and I ask you to do yours without fear, favour or affection or hope of reward.

An Excellent Initial Performance by the Woodward Dramatic Co.—The Old Favorites to the Front.

A medium sized audience witnessed the opening performance of the two weeks' engagement of the Woodward Dramatic Co. at Bradburn's Opera house last night, and were more than pleased with the entertainment, if the amount of applause accorded be a true criterion of their feelings. The Woodward Dramatic Co. give a performance unexcelled by the "75c. and $1 companies" which occasionally stop at Peterborough for one night, and who come with no higher recommendations than the Woodward Co. Mr. Woodward and his company come to town bearing the very highest testimonials, which only enforce the reputation they gained during their engagement here last year. The low prices, 10, 20 and 30c., make it possible and easy for the poorest person to enjoy two hours of solid pleasure and instruction. "Queens Evidence," as given last night, is a drama that strikes the sympathetic chords in every heart, while at times it urges to uncontrollable laughter. Miss Eugenie Lindeman as "Kate Midland," the wronged, faithful, forgiving wife, enlisted the entire sympathy and condolence of the audience, by her pathetic and appealing helplessness when blinded—the result of a jealous husbands rage. Mr. Geo. Woodward as "Isaacs," and Carl Smith as "Mathew Thornton," his accomplice in counterfeiting, two of a "very bad sort," were excellent, especially the former. The other characters of the cast performed their parts in a most artistic and creditable manner, and the performance at close placed the Woodward company high in the people's

We offer the entire stock of Mantle Cloths at COST PRICE to clear, and the public can rest assured that there is no better assortment in town. We will cut and fit without extra charge.

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 30c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 30 per cent higher.

"NEARING THE END!"

CITY CLOTHING STORE,

MARVELLOUS CHEAP OVERCOATS!

A recent advantageous purchase made at a time when moder ate weather influenced manufacturers to make unusual reductions for the sake of ready cash, now enables me to offer OVERCOATS at prices in many instances actually less than the cost of materials. And as the prices come within reach of all, what can be more serviceable than a good warm Overcoat for a Christmas or New Years present?

LOTS OF OTHER USEFUL HOLIDAY PRESENTS, such as Hand-some Gents Furnishings, Linen Shirts, Woollen Underwear of every Grade. Ties, Collars, Cuffs, Gloves, Silk Handkerchiefs, Braces, Studs, Coff Buttons, &c. Remember no reserve from now until the end of the year. We mean business.

We cordially invite those who anticipate erecting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I've sold gives first-class satisfaction, and I am determined that every house I build shall be a standing testimonial to honest building. MURDER IN A DIVE.

A WIFE REVEALS HER HUSBAND'S GHASTLY SECRETS.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 20.—About twelve months ago a man named Richard Shennick, a rather rough character, kept an all-night house near Newmarket here. Shennick kept bulldogs and sold all sorts of drinks, and his house was open to blacks as well as whites. He sold out his place some months ago, and separating from his wife, left for Cincinnati. Last Saturday Shennick's wife, whom he deserted, imagined she was dying and sent for Police Justice Richardson, to whom she made the following startling statement: She said that she was in the habit of aiding her husband in tending bar, and they lived over the bar. One night she came down between 11 and 12 o'clock to see if her presence was needed. She entered the bar from the rear, and as she came in she saw Shennick knock a man senseless to the floor with a pair of brass knuckles. Shennick ordered her to leave the room, and she went upstairs but could not rest. Creeping back, she saw him remove a large roll of bank notes from the dead man's pockets, drag the body behind the counter, raise the drop-door, and drop it into a well.

Shortly after this occurred two public officers were missing in the state—W. H. Crawford, Treasurer of Bland County, and J. M. Carroll, Clerk of Stanton. Nothing has been heard of either since they were seen in Richmond, and when the woman was asked to describe the man she gave a very accurate description of the missing treasurer. Justice Richardson at once informed the police of the woman's statement, and took steps to verify the same if possible. The officers went to the house, which is an old rickety affair, and securing a force of hands ripped up the flooring behind the bar and commenced digging for the well. This was about 1 p.m. and up to 9 o'clock this evening no bones or anything like a well had been found. The door to the bar was locked, and a large crowd has been standing on the sidewalk since the search began. Shennick wrote to an ex-detective here a short time since asking if there was any talk about him in Richmond, and expressing a desire to come back and live in Richmond. His wife is still alive, and it is by no means certain that she will die for some time. Her statement has many inaccuracies, but it is generally believed that there is a great deal of truth in it.

A COUNTERFEITER'S DEN.

From it the Northwest was Flooded With Spurious Coin.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—For months Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee and the smaller cities of the Northwest have been flooded with spurious silver dollars. The detectives got on the trail of a negro, whom they suspected of being an accomplice of the counterfeiters, and followed him to a small farm house near Pullman.

Upon searching the house nothing but fifty sheets of platinum and a small box filled with steel filings were found, but in an old drain in the rear was a box containing a number of first class dies and a small machine used for perfecting the milling around the edges of the coins. A leather bag containing a quantity of white metal, a package of silver leaf and a small smelting furnace were also found in the drain. In addition four dies of $2.50 gold pieces ready carved in hgnum vitæ were discovered. A doctor, residing in Minneapolis, to whom several boxes containing counterfeits had been shipped, has been arrested.

A Case of Too Much Quail.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Ten days before Mann, the Minneapolis quail-eater, started in on his task to eat thirty birds in thirty days for a bet of $1000, Charles Miller had commenced the same business on another wager. Yesterday Miller attacked his twenty-eighth bird. He felt well enough when he went down to his quail, ate a little bread and butter and potatoes and then attacked the bird. After two bites Miller was taken violently ill, vomiting and being utterly unable to go on with the task. No serious results are expected, and he will probably be all right in a day or two. Mann ate his eighteenth quail last night and is still feeling well.

Denounced as Cowards.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Dec. 21.—A meeting of enlisted men was held at Fort Elliott yesterday for the purpose of expressing contempt for the conduct of Sergeant Charles Connor and party, two privates, who while armed and en route to Fort Leavenworth as military prisoners, suffered themselves to be robbed in broad daylight by two unmasked highwaymen on the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the cowardly conduct of the party.

Incendiarism Fire a Town.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 21.—News is received from Victoria, an inland town in Faulkner County, that about 3 o'clock Sunday morning every business house in the town was simultaneously set on fire and burned to the ground, including the barn, cribs and outhouses of George and Thomas Harris, residing half a mile from Victoria. Nothing at all was saved. Loss $150,000. No one has yet been arrested, but suspicion points to certain parties.

AN OLD FEUD ENDED.

The Notorious Sam Starr and an Enemy Slaughter Each Other.

FORT SMITH, Ark., Dec. 21.—For many years there has existed a deadly feud between the Foremans and Starrs of the Cherokee nation. Six months ago Sam Starr had his horse shot from under him while riding through the woods in the Nation. Suspecting Ben Foreman of the deed, he determined to avenge it, but was waylaid and shot by some of his enemies near Younger's Bend. His wounds being considered fatal he was taken to a house, and while the guards were at dinner he seized a Winchester rifle and escaped to Younger's Bend, where he lay concealed until his wife, the notorious Belle Starr, could get him to escape by swimming the Arkansas River and traveling by night to Fort Smith.

Sam Starr was charged with robbing the United States mail, and while here he surrendered himself to the authorities, but when able to travel Starr returned to the Nation. Saturday he started to Fort Smith but stopped at a dance near Foreman's ranch. Ben Foreman was there. Starr demanded pay for the horse he had killed, when Foreman drew his pistol and shot Starr through the heart. Starr had cut his pistol and fired as he fell. The bullet broke Foreman's neck and both men died almost instantly. This ends one of the oldest and bloodiest feuds of the many that have existed in the Cherokee nation, a feud that has lasted for fifty years and resulted in the death of many men on both sides.

THE CAMPBELL CASE.

Lord Colin Unqualifiedly Denounced upon All Sides.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—The Post's London despatch says the result of the Campbell divorce case was generally anticipated, but the verdict was awaited with intense interest last night. To-day it monopolizes conversation. There are two comments on all sides, severe condemnation of Gen. Butler for not entering the witness box, and the most unsparing denunciations of the character of Lord Colin Campbell. On the last point everybody is agreed. It would be impossible to exaggerate the severity of their views. So great has been the scandal caused by the publication of the testimony in detail in the Evening Standard and Evening News that some legislation is almost certain to result, with a view to prevent this practice, as far as is consistent with the ends of justice. An application last Saturday, for an order to prevent the Evening News from reporting the counsels' speeches on the ground that they were not privileged, and constituted obscene libels, failed, although the Judge intimated that had it been made at the beginning of the trial he would have been inclined to grant it. At an early stage of the proceedings the St. James Gazette and the Pall Mall Gazette cut down the reports to their barest outline.

Sacramento Highbinders Again.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 7.—The excitement in front of the Golden Eagle Hotel yesterday morning, caused by an armed gang of highbinders attempting to interfere with the duties of the United States deputy marshals in conducting to a safe place three Chinese damsels who claimed that they were involuntarily held as slaves for immoral purposes, was the topic of conversation yesterday by all classes of citizens. No person had an idea that the highbinders would be so bold. One of them was seen to draw a large knife and was in the act of cutting the lines of the horses attached to the hack, but, observing a revolver pointed at him, subsided. The marshals and their charge were followed as far as Fourteenth and P streets by the highbinders in an old express wagon, but the hack horses were too fast for them. This morning quite a crowd gathered on the sidewalk at Seventh and J streets waiting for the appearance of the women. A story was circulated that there was "blood on the face of the moon." The highbinders were not so numerous as yesterday, but what few were present kept themselves very shady. Chief Dillman was on hand to preserve order. He stationed himself on the sidewalk, and a number of officers kept themselves in readiness. Besides these present were Constable Swift and his deputy and Deputy Sheriff O'Meara. Had an attempt been made, in case the damsels made their appearance, to take them away, there is no doubt that bloodshed would have ensued.

In the afternoon United States Commissioner Bugbey held Hoy Gout You in $3000 bail to appear before the United States Grand Jury on a charge of keeping the three Chinese women in involuntary servitude. The witnesses were held in $500 bail each.

A Sculptor at Work in Jail.

From the Liverpool Courier.

The new statue of Queen Anne, which the corporation of London have erected in front of St. Peter's Cathedral, is to be unveiled on Dec. 15 by the Lord Mayor, with full civic ceremony. Mr. Belt, who is now undergoing a long term of imprisonment, is the artist, and his incarceration has in no way impeded the progress of the work. The statue has in fact been modelled in jail, and its execution in permanent form has been personally superintended by the sculptor. A canvas cloth at present conceals it from public view, but it is admitted by all who have seen it to be an exceedingly successful work.

Pushing the Sultan Hard.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A Vienna newspaper states that the Russian ambassador in Constantinople has obtained strong influence over the Imperial fortune-teller. This person possesses the greatest influence in the palace and is consulted by the Sultan daily. The effect of Russian control of this personage's advice to the Sultan will probably counteract all other influences that can be brought to bear on the Porte. Enlightened Mussulmans complain bitterly of the Sultan's superstition.

What Gladstone Expects.

DUBLIN, Dec. 21.—An influential wire-puller belonging to the Gladstonian section of the Liberals was recently asked what he expected from Parnell. He replied that he expected Parnell to repudiate the "plan of campaign," and to induce the Catholic clergymen of Ireland to withdraw their support from the plan forthwith, otherwise, he added, we are ruined, and will be powerless and in a ridiculous position when Parliament meets.

THE QUEEN'S OWN TEAM DEFEATED.

The Royal Scots Outpull Them But They Have a Good Time.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—A military entertainment, under the auspices of the Garrison Artillery, was held in the Queen's Hall this evening before a very large audience. After bayonet exercise by a squad from the brigade, which was done excellently, came the event of the evening, the tug-of-war for which teams had entered from the Queen's Own, Royal Scots (three teams) and the M. G. A. Lieut.-Col. Maunice was referee and Capt. Rochet of the Vics timekeeper. The first pull was between the first team of the Royal Scots and the Queen's Own, the former being much the heavier of the two. The visitors got a rousing reception, the applause lasting several minutes. The pull was a hard one, lasting fully three minutes, and was awarded to the Royal Scots by a few inches, neither side yielding very much. The two Royal Scot teams then pulled, the first winning easily. The third pull was between the Scots first team and the Garrison Artillery and was the most contested of the evening, the M. G. A. winning in excellent style. The final tug was between F Company team, Royal Scots, and the M. G. A., which was decided in favor of the Scots. Afterwards there was an exhibition between the Queen's Own and the winners, which was won by the visitors. Among the attractions of the evening was an exhibition of swordsmanship by Prof. Reid, formerly of Toronto. The Queen's Own men left for home by the midnight train, well pleased with their visit, although disappointed at not winning.

BUFFALO, Dec. 21.—Yesterday morning a German woman named Mrs. Janka, residing at 68 Cherry-street, took a quantity of arsenic with suicidal intent. ELECTORS UNDER WHICH PREMIER.

Mr. Meredith, who by the grace of Sir John Macdonald holds, as lieutenant, the leadership of the Conservative party in Ontario, for want of a better platform proposes to restore all powers to the municipalities: If he restores these powers to the municipalities, then the municipalities will have not only possess the power but be charged with the duty of defraying, by direct taxation, too, the cost of many expensive services now borne by the Provincial government, which spends on an average one million nine hundred thousand dollars per year on items, which relieve the municipalities of local taxation to that amount. The absolutely necessary expenses of the Ontario government could be carried on for an average sum of $800,000 or $700,000 per year, while the average cost is two millions and a half. This difference of $1,900,000 is caused by the Mowat administration devoting this sum to purposes which save the people from paying that amount of taxes. Will the people be taken in by Mr. Meredith's clap-trap and change a system that works well, and which is honestly administered, for one which under the specious guise of giving the municipalities greater power, will increase the burdens of local taxation by hundreds of thousands of dollars per year? There is a homely adage, "Let well enough alone." Don't advocate change for the mere sake of change. Mr. Meredith is aiming to delude the people into giving him and his followers a chance at the management of your finances. Don't give them that chance. The following comparison of the results of Reform and Conservative rule shows what the issue would be:—

LIBERAL RULE.	CONSERVATIVE RULE
Ontario Government:	Dominion Government
Surplus of Assets over Liabilities.	Dominion Debt. National
$8,766,000	$281,000,000.
Ontario surplus over current expenditures for 1885.	Dominion deficit—beyond current expenditures for 1885-6.
$150,000.	$3,865,554.

One is the record of the Mowat Administration and the other of the Dominion Government, which is doing its best to supplant Mr. Mowat and place Mr. Meredith, the pliant tool of Sir John in charge of Ontario's surplus. Do the electors think it will pay to make the change? We do not think they entertain that opinion, and we are content to wait for their answer on Dec. 28th.

A PERTINENT REBUKE.

The Canada Presbyterian, the organ of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, thus denounces the sectarian discord raised by the Mail and its political allies, which they claim is justified by the alleged fact that "Protestantism is in danger." The Presbyterian says:—"The infamous work of kindling religious strife is always easily done in a mixed community like ours. An idiot with a torch can burn down Toronto quite as easily as a sensible man. In fact, an idiot is much more likely to burn the city than a sensible man would be. The most abandoned political profligate that ever wagged his lying tongue or drew a venal pen can stir up the most deadly sectarian strife as quickly as the ablest man in the country. Therefore, we say to every reader, 'Beware of the tramp who tries to kindle strife among neighbors.' The tramp will go back to his lair on the 29th, but the neighbors remain and must be met every day. Many of them are good neighbors who have helped us many a time in the past thirty or forty years. More's the shame to quarrel with them at the bidding of any scamp who may be earning a few dollars a day by stirring up the worst passions of human nature.'

THE PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS SLANDER.

As the date of the elections comes on, there will be numerous slanderous charges against the Mowat Administration circulated with the hope that no opportunity of contradiction will be afforded. Among the absurd statements already afloat, are those in reference to the erection of the new Provincial Parliamentary buildings in Toronto, and the Conservative organs and wire-pullers are mightily concerned over the allegation they make that there is something awfully corrupt and iniquitous in connection with the matter. It is charged that the contract for the bare walls alone is $800,000. This is not the case. The contract, which includes not only the "bare walls" but more than two-thirds the entire work, is for $671,000. The further allegation that the cost to complete the buildings will be two millions of dollars is another gross exaggeration. The architects, who have professionally examined the plans, assert that the entire cost cannot, at the outside, be over one million of dollars. This is, of course, somewhat in excess of the sum appropriated by the Legislature for the purpose of erecting new buildings. But it must also be borne in mind that the lands to be sold for the purpose of assisting in the erection of the buildings have increased in value, far beyond the calculations made at the time the Legislature voted the grant for the new buildings. These lands will, it is safe to say, realize an amount very close to three-quarters of a million dollars, so that the new Parliament buildings, possibly costing one million dollars, will not represent a cash outlay by the Province of more than $300,000 or $400,000. Stress is also laid on the assertion that the cost of the contract has not been officially announced—that, therefore, there is something dark and dangerous. This announcement, when the proper time comes, will officially be made. The Government, at the next session of the Legislature, will make a full statement in reference to the matter, and the people, through their representatives, can pronounce judgment upon and decide whether the course of the Government has been the proper one to pursue. The Government is willing to answer to Parliament for its course in the matter, and because they do not volunteer official information to Conservative candidates and campaign pamphleteers, that is no ground for asserting that they have anything it is desirable to conceal. Let the electors beware. Accept into-in the day statements that may be trumped up at the last hour, with the greatest caution. The Conservatives are after the control of the Provincial surplus, amassed largely by the wise and economical financial administration of the Mowat Government, and they will not stick at trifles nor false statements to gain the coveted goal, the Treasury benches.

Nicholls Hospital.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner.

SIR,—The main cause of complaint to-day among the ratepayers is not what it has cost, the first 12 or 18 months, to maintain the Nicholls hospital, but what the ratepayers have actually been compelled to pay in their taxes this year to this institution, and also they have no idea what they will have to pay in the years to come, having no control of the spending of their money. The council should control the spending of the thousands of our money which will doubtless be demanded, and not a body of men chosen either by Mrs. Nicholls or the churches. Few men can be found who favor the continuing of this institution by the town. Provision dealers and merchants who would be likely to lose the patronage of such an institution and friends of the person after whom it is named might be expected to object. We are asked to possess ourselves in patience. We can't do it or we won't do it, until this thing is put right. How far will Mrs. Nicholls' $900.00 (endowment interest) go towards maintaining this hospital? It don't pay within $28 a year the salary of the lady superintendent and hired man and their board. The wages and board of the present staff amounts to $2,296 00 a year, to say nothing about fuel, light, bedding, wear and tear to furniture and a thousand and one things of which we will bear nothing until we have to pay for them. Ratepayers, should there come an influx of non-paying patients into this institution, and the staff of nurses and attendants doubled, are you aware that you can be compelled to pay all expenses over and above the $900 above mentioned? This, I understand, is the position the charter of Nicholls Hospital places you in. And, moreover, see what it costs you to convey a few hundred dollars to some of our afflicted townspeople. About $3,000 has been spent yearly to convey this little help to them. There are men and women paying taxes to this concern who can't pay their own bread or doctor's bill. Men and women who are grinding their very life and soul out to make an honest dollar and are forced to support this staff of officials and assistants from their scant earnings. Ratepayers, should this be so? Ratepayers, are we expressing your sentiments when we say we won't stand this sort of thing? If we are compelled to (which Heaven forbid) we will legislate at once to change the name of this institution. Let your answer to the above questions be heard loud and distinct at the polls of 1887. Vote for no man who refuses to pledge himself to do all in his power to relieve you of this burden.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

* * * * * *

As fast as a hired carriage could take him Mr. Sarrazin drove from the court to Mrs. Linley's lodgings to tell her that the one great object of securing her right to her child had been achieved.

At the door he was met by Mrs. Presty. She was accompanied by a stranger, whose medical services had been required. Interested professionally in hearing the result of the trial this gentleman volunteered to communicate the good news to his patient. He had been waiting to administer a composing draught until the suspense from which Mrs. Linley was suffering might be relieved and a reasonable hope be entertained that the medicine would produce the right effect. With that explanation he left the room.

While the doctor was speaking Mrs. Presty was drawing her own conclusions from a close scrutiny of Mr. Sarrazin's face.

"I am going to make a disagreeable remark," she announced. "You look ten years older, sir, than you did when you left us this morning to go to the court. Do me a favor—come to the sideboard." The lawyer having obeyed, she poured out a glass of wine. "There is the remedy," she resumed, "when something has happened to worry you."

"Worry isn't the right word," Mr. Sarrazin declared. "I'm furious! It's a most improper thing for a person in my position to say of a person in the lord president's position; but I do say it—he ought to be ashamed of himself."

"After giving us our divorce?" Mrs. Presty exclaimed. "What has he done?"

Mr. Sarrazin repeated what the judge had said of Mrs. Linley. "In my opinion," he added, "such language as that is an insult to your daughter."

"And yet," Mrs. Presty repeated, "he has given us our divorce." She returned to the sideboard, poured out a second dose of the remedy against worry, and took it herself. "What sort of character does the lord president bear?" she asked, when she had emptied her glass.

This seemed to be an extraordinary question to put under the circumstances. Mr. Sarrazin answered it, however, to the best of his ability. "An excellent character," he said; "that's the unaccountable part of it. I hear that he is one of the most careful and considerate men who ever sat on the bench. Excuse me, Mrs. Presty, I didn't intend to produce that impression on you."

"What impression, Mr. Sarrazin?"

"You look as if you thought there was some excuse for the judge."

"That's exactly what I do think."

"You find an excuse for him?"

"I do."

"What is it, ma'am?"

"Constitutional infirmity, sir."

"May I ask of what nature?"

"You may. Gout."

Mr. Sarrazin thought he understood her at last. "You know the lord president," he said.

Mrs. Presty denied it positively. "No, Mr. Sarrazin, I don't get at it in that way. I merely consult my experience of another official person of high rank, and apply it to the lord president. You know that my first husband was a cabinet minister?"

"I have heard you say so, Mrs. Presty, on more than one occasion."

"Very well. You may also have heard that the late Mr. Ormond was a remarkably well-bred man. In and out of the house of commons, courteous almost to a fault. One day I happened to interrupt him when he was absorbed over an act of parliament. Before I could apologise—I tell you this in the strictest confidence—he threw the act of parliament at my head. Ninety-nine women out of a hundred would have thrown it back again. Knowing his constituents, I decided on waiting a day or two. On the second day my anticipations were realized. Mr. Ormond's great toe was as big as my fist, and as red as a lobster; he apologized for the act of parliament with tears in his eyes. Suppressed gout in Mr. Ormond's temper. Suppressed gout in the lord president's temper. He will have a toe; and, if I can prevail upon my daughter to call upon him, I have not the least doubt he will apologise to her with tears in his eyes."

This interesting experiment was never destined to be tried. Right or wrong, Mrs. Presty's theory explained the only explanation of the judge's severity. Mr. Sarrazin attempted to change the subject. Mrs. Presty had not quite done with it yet. "There is one more thing I want to say," she proceeded. "Will his lordship's remarks appear in the newspapers?"

"Not a doubt of it."

"In that case I will take care (for my daughter's sake) that no newspapers enter the house to-morrow. As for visitors, we needn't be afraid of them. Catherine is not likely to be able to leave her room; the worry of this miserable business has quite broken her down."

The doctor returned at that moment.

Without taking the old lady's gloomy view of his patient, he admitted that she was in a low nervous condition; and he had reason to suppose, judging by her reply to a question which he had ventured to put, that she had associations with Scotland which made a visit to that country far from agreeable to her. His advice was that she should leave Edinburgh as soon as possible and go south. If the change of climate led to no improvement, she would at least be in a position to consult the best physicians in London. In a day or two more it would be safe to remove her—provided she was not permitted to exhaust her strength by taking long railway journeys.

Having given his advice, the doctor took leave. Soon after he had gone Kitty made her appearance charged with a message from Mrs. Linley's room.

"Hasn't the physic sent your mother to sleep yet?" Mrs. Presty inquired.

Kitty shook her head. "Mamma wants to go away to-morrow, and no physic will make her sleep till she has seen you, and settled about it. That's what she told me to say. If I behaved in that way about my physic I should catch it."

Mrs. Presty left the room, watched by her granddaughter with an appearance of anxiety which it was not easy to understand. "What's the matter?" Mr. Sarrazin asked. "You look very serious to-day."

Kitty held up a warning hand. "Grandma sometimes listens at doors," she whispered. "I don't want her to hear me." She waited a little longer, and then approached Mr. Sarrazin, frowning mysteriously. "Take me up on your knee," she said. "There's something wrong going on in this house."

Mr. Sarrazin took her on his knee and rashly asked what had gone wrong. Kitty's reply puzzled him.

"I go to mamma's room every morning when I wake. [illegible] I get into her bed, and I give her a kiss, and I say good-morning—and sometimes, if she isn't in a hurry to get up, I stop in her bed and go to sleep again. Mamma thought I was asleep this morning. I wasn't asleep; I was only quiet. I don't know why I was quiet."

Mr. Sarrazin's kindness still encouraged her. "Well," he said, "and what happened after that?"

"Grandmamma came in. She told mamma to keep up her spirits. She says: 'It will be all over in a few hours more.' She says: 'What a burden it will be off your mind.' She says: 'Is that child asleep?' And mamma says: 'Yes.' And grandmamma took one of mamma's towels. And I thought she was going to wash herself. What would you have thought?"

Mr. Sarrazin began to doubt whether he would do well to discuss Mrs. Presty's object in taking the towel. He only said "Go on."

"Grandmamma dipped it into the water-jug," Kitty continued, with a grave face: "but she didn't wash herself. She went to one of mamma's boxes. Though she is so old, she's awfully strong, I can tell you. She rubbed off the luggage-label in no time. Mamma says: 'What are you doing that for?' And grandmamma says—this is the dreadful thing that I want you to explain; oh, I can remember it all; it's like learning lessons, only much nicer—grandmamma says: 'Before the day is over the name on your boxes will be your name no longer.'"

Mr. Sarrazin now became aware of the labyrinth into which his young friend had innocently led him. The divorce, and the inevitable return (when the husband was no longer the husband) to the wife's maiden name—these were the subjects on which Kitty's desire for enlightenment applied to the wisest person within her reach, her mother's legal adviser.

Mr. Sarrazin tried to put her off his knee. She held him round the neck. He thought of the railway as a promising excuse, and told her he must go back to London. She held him a little tighter. "I really can't wait, my dear;" he got up as he said it. Kitty hung on to him with her legs as well as her arms, and, finding the position uncomfortable, lost her temper. "Mamma's going to have a new name," she shouted, as if the lawyer had suddenly become deaf. "Grandmamma says she must be Mrs. Ormond. And I must be Miss Ormond. I won't. Where's papa? I want to write to him; I know he won't allow it. Do you hear? Where's papa?"

She fastened her little hands on Mr. Sarrazin's coat collar and tried to shake him, in a fury of resolution to know what it all meant. At that critical moment Mrs. Presty opened the door and stood petrified on the threshold.

"Hanging on to Mr. Sarrazin with her arms and her legs!" exclaimed the old lady. "You little wretch, which are you, a monkey or a child?"

The lawyer gently deposited Kitty on the floor. "I mean to have it out of you," she whispered, as he set her on her feet.

Mrs. Presty pointed sternly to the open door. "Screaming, too," she resumed, "when quiet in the house is of the utmost importance to your mother. Go! if I hear you again, bread and water and no doll for the rest of the week."

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in New York State, costing me $16. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even in baths in the water has never come down. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KIRK.

Beaten With his Own Stick.

The Conservative candidate is responsible for the course the nomination proceedings took on Tuesday. Mr. Stratton was informed that it was Mr. Carnegie's game to arrange that Mr. Stratton should address the electors first, Mr. Carnegie to follow and consume so much time that no opportunity would be left to Mr. Bertram, one of the nominees, to reply. Mr. Carnegie refused to make any arrangement as to the time for the addresses. Acting on this information, and on the assumption deducible from Mr. Carnegie's refusal to make arrangements, Mr. Stratton who spoke first dealt exhaustively with the various public questions bearing on the present contest. If Mr. Carnegie has any complaint to make, he has only himself to blame. He should not grumble if he was beaten at his own game, nor strike if he is beaten with the stick he cut for another.

Nomination Proceedings.

Addresses by the Candidates—A Small Audience but Much Enthusiasm—Records Lold Bare.

Speeches commenced about 1 p.m. The candidates nominated, after making brief speeches, all retired except Messrs. Stratton and Carnegie. The nominees were then called on to address a few remarks to the electors.

Mr. J. R. STRATTON was applauded on rising. He commenced by stating that he had been unanimously nominated by the Liberal Association, and he had received such encouragement from them only divided from him by partyism, and had been so urged by his friends, that he had consented to become a candidate. The dreadful crime was being hurled at him that he was too young. This objection was growing less as he grew older. Besides,it was unnecessary to grow old in years and political wisdom-ness to secure a majority of the votes of the electors of this riding. The time had arrived when young men were taking their proper places in the lists of political combat, and the Mowat Government had enfranchised the young men and thus gave them a greater voice in the affairs of the province. The Mowat Administration had been in power for 14 years, and in the 7 or 8 years Mr.Carnegie had been in Parliament he had not been able to find one single scrap of wrong doing on their part. This either proved that Mr. Carnegie was recreant to his trust or unqualified for his position, or else the Mowat Administration had done no wrong. Mr. Stratton enumerated a number of the amendments introduced by the Mowat Government for the benefit of the people of the province. He gave figures showing the various amounts given by the Mowat Administration to public enterprises. Thus they would see that that Mr. Mowat in giving the money back to the people they would have found necessary. The school houses, town halls and other buildings were monuments to the honesty and liberality of the Mowat government. The government had also been deprived of a revenue of $30,000 saved in county court costs, which was left in pockets of the people. He the speaker also referred to the reduction of the marriage licenses which directly benefitted the people. The economical administration of the Crown Lands department by the Mowat administration was pointed out the latter selling the Crown domain for $400 per square mile and the former for $5 per square mile to government favorites. Reference was also made to the liberal policy of the Mowat government in dealing with Colonization Roads for the benefit of this county and others. The plucky struggle of Mr. Mowat in upholding Provincial rights, in keeping for this Province 100,000 square miles of territory which Sir John, by the aid of Mr. Carnegie and his friends, was willing to have the Province robbed, was worthy of the approval of the people, and his help was still needed, for Sir John was claiming the minerals and timber, and he counted on the help of Mr. Meredith and Mr. Carnegie to make good his claim. The people should stand by Mr. Mowat in keeping for Ontario the untold wealth contained in the 65,000,000 of acres of North-west Ontario.

RELIEVED THEM OF THE TAXATION

THE FINANCIAL RECORD of the Mowat Administration, was one the people would approve, and though Mr. Carnegie had expressed his disapproval of the "reckless expenditure" of the province, in all the $2 851,552 spent in 1884 but one item of $2,750, for a dam on Burnt river, was objected to. In the three years Mr. Carnegie had spent in Parliament he had not been able to point out a single corrupt practice in the Mowat Administration, and it ill became him to stand before the electors and claim that their money was wrongly spent. The speaker referred to the number of institutions supported by the Mowat Government out of the surplus funds of the province, which thus found its way back to the pockets of the people. It was the policy of the Government to reduce taxation as far as possible. In Peterborough county alone had been spent $756.318. In referring to the school book question Mr. Stratton offered to leave it to Mr. Carnegie if the new first book at 10c. was not twice as cheap as the old one at 5c. He compared the prices of school books in the United States with that paid in Ontario, and showed that the people of this province paid less for their books than any other people. He also referred to Mr. Mowat's descent from the bench,which was the cause of such trouble to the Tories. It was all wrong for Mr. Mowat, but perfectly right for Hon. Mr. Thompson or other members of Sir John's Cabinet. After referring to the Agricultural College, the appointment of Division Court officers, the was pointed out as one Mr. Carnegie was endeavoring to take every advantage of, and documents were read to show that at the elections of 1883 the Conservative party and Mr. Carnegie made strong appeals to the Roman Catholics to elect Mr. Meredith and defeat Mr. Mowat, who was denying the Catholics justice. It was shown that the cry was made purely for political effect, and to draw attention from the real issues of the election. Reference was made to the Scripture Readings in schools, which had been approved of by the leading Protestant ministers of all denominations. If there was any danger to Protestantism in the alleged legislation in their interests, Mr. Carnegie was responsible for his share, for he sat in the house when it was passed and never raised his voice against it. It was pointed out that Mr. Carnegie did not oppose the appointment of a Catholic representative on the High School board. After defining his position on the labor question, he called upon all the electors to go to the polls and record their vote for the government that had done so much for them, and give their support to a supporter of the most efficient government the Province ever knew. He closed his speech of three hours and a half amidst loud applause.

Mr. CARNEGIE followed and endeavored to controvert the arguments of the last speaker, employing a re-hash of the extraordinary arguments with which he has been deluding the electors in the present campaign. A large portion of his address was devoted to of Mr. Stratton and Mr. Bertram.

Mr. BERTRAM briefly replied and successfully defended himself against the attacks of Mr. Carnegie, and felt sure he had gained nothing in the eyes of the electors by this ruse. He also effectually disposed of the charges that he was not in accord with the course of the Mowat Administration. If were desired in this campaign, he could prove certain things against Mr. Carnegie that are not very palatable. He also denied the story that was being circulated as to his contempt for Catholics and their votes. The insinuation of Mr. Carnegie that he had been bought over by the Mowat Government by certain lumbering privileges in the back townships, he gave the lie direct, and defied anyone to prove that he had truckled to any government or individual. These little personal matters being disposed of, Mr. Bertram briefly reviewed Mr. Carnegie's record in the House of Assembly, and the position he took on the reduction of members and his loud talk of what he would do if given a seat in Parliament. The speaker eulogized the Mowat Government, especially in regard to their management of the timber limits, and denounced the "No Popery" cry as senseless and misleading. He issued a challenge to Mr. Carnegie to meet him at any time and settle the matter between them on the public platform, concluding by calling on the electors to support Mowat and help put down the "brawling brood of briberu."

The meeting closed, without the usual party and loyal cheers, about 6 o'clock. Mr. Toker, having seconded the resolution to give vent to his feelings in a manner which his noisy interruptions of the speakers throughout the meeting would not satisfactorily do, the audience filed quietly out, and Mr. Toker "for lack of time. Mr. Sheriff," was compelled to abridge his remarks.

A very important institution in his own opinion,—who professes to hold the vote of the Rugby Ward in the hollow of his hand, while himself very busy during the proceedings in interrupting and misrepresenting Mr. Bertram especially. It will be well for him not to be led away by the idea that very much dependence will be placed on what he would assert or swear to.

Last Sitting Nominations.

The following nominations were made at Norwood :—

Thomas Bleasrd, proposed by Mr. John Lang, seconded by Mr. James Moore.

W. H. Stephenson, proposed by Mr. David Ross, seconded by Mr. James Fido.

Duncan McLeod, proposed by Mr. Brockaridge, seconded by Mr. Drain.

James Jardine, proposed by Dr. Maggie, seconded by Thos. Fraser.

John Bateman, proposed by Mr. Brotn, seconded by Mr. Knox.

J. R. McWilliams, proposed by Mr. W. Moher, seconded by Mr. Chrow.

The first two are the Liberal and Conservative candidates, respectively. The last three, of course, retired. Addresses were delivered, Mr. McWilliams closing with an effective rejoinder to Mr. Bertram, giving a scathing review of his record.

New Railway Schemes.

Our energetic reeve, says the Lakefield Chronicle, is trying to bring about a scheme whereby the C. P. R. would run to Lakefield. Thursday the village was visited by two of the leading men of the Canada Pacific and Grand Trunk railways, with a view to carrying this out next summer. Should this become an accomplished fact, and there is great probability that it will, it would prove a great boon to Lakefield, as not only would it largely increase the number of visitors to our beautiful lakes during the summer months, but the C. P. R. would draw large supplies of wood, stone, etc., from our back country. Reeve Strickland is the right man to push our interests to the front and carry this scheme to a successful termination.

The Canada Gazette of Friday contains the following : "Mr. T. P. Pierce gives notice that he has purchased the property of the Cobourg, Peterborough and Marmora Railway and Mining Company, and will apply to Parliament for an Act authorizing him to build the road and operate the mines.

Characteristic.

At the nomination yesterday Mr.Carnegie, with characteristic meanness, made the insinuation that Mr. Bertram was supporting the Mowat Government because he had received favors from that Government in his lumber business. The insinuation was instantly repelled by Mr. Bertram and proof demanded, which not having been offered, Mr. Carnegie is in the position of a vile slanderer, who makes insinuations which he cannot prove and which it is dafied him to prove.

A Frightful Death

A very serious accident occurred at Millbrook last Friday night at about 6 p.m., writes a correspondent of the Guide. Mrs. Wilkinson, who lives opposite, noticed a strong light in J. B. Smith's drug store, and thinking there was something wrong ran over. Flames were issuing from the back room, whereupon she gave the alarm. Messrs. Anderson, McIntosh and Philip were about the first to appear upon the scene, and on going into the back room, or hall, they found Mr. Smith upon his knees, enveloped in flames. They immediately took his clothes off, his coat, pants and boots being almost burned to a crisp, and sent for Dr Ough. The Dr. has him wrapped in a large quilt and immediately taken to his home, where his wounds were dressed, and found to be of a very serious character, in fact so much so that very little hope is held of his recovery. There is no telling how the accident occurred. One theory is that he must have been sitting near the stove, and falling asleep his clothing took fire, and on awaking he ran into the back room and threw a bucket of water over himself, (the bucket was standing empty in the room and water all over the floor) but failed to quench it. One of his feet and both legs are badly burnt, also his hips, thighs and back, from shoulder to shoulder. LATER.—The unfortunate man died Sunday, and the funeral took place Monday afternoon, being largely attended by the Masonic fraternity, headed by the village brass band.

Many Merchants always advertise in the Examiner. Not one should omit to do so during the holiday season! Those who advertise sell their goods; those who don't will probably have to keep them over till another Christmas!

Our Characters.

From the universal law of habits, little by little, day by day, act by act, thread by thread, link by link, we mould the character, we weave the woof, we forge the chains which bind our being, and, in forming our habits, form our character.

Examiner Bindery.

Merchants and business men, now is the time to call at the EXAMINER bindery and leave your orders for journals, day books, ledgers, invoice books, cheque books, and all blank books needed in business. Don't wait till the moment you want to use them. All blank books last longer for not being used immediately after being finished.

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 20c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 20 per cent higher.

TO DEPOSITORS—Deposits are received by this Company both on current account and for periods of one year or longer. The rate of interest paid on amounts deposited on current account and which may be withdrawn by check in such sums as the depositor may from time to time require, is FOUR per cent., either paid or compounded half-yearly, and the rate on yearly deposits is FIVE per cent.

TO INVESTORS—The five and ten year FIVE PER CENT DEBENTURES of this Company which are issued in denominations of $100, $200, $400 and $1000 each, transferable by endorsement, with half-yearly interest Coupons attached, payable at the Head Office of the Company in Peterborough, or at any Branch of the Bank of Toronto in Canada, afford a safe and convenient mode of investment.

The funds of the Company being invested in first mortgages on Real Estate, no better security can be offered to depositors or debenture-holders, they having a first claim or mortgage on the whole Assets of the Company, the shareholders having the second. The annual statement shows that the amount so invested was over [illegible], and on the security of real estate at least double that value.

By the laws of Ontario, Trustees, Executors and Administrators may deposit Trust Funds of the estates which they control in this Company, and are free from all further liability, a privilege of which many have largely availed themselves.

TO BORROWERS—Money is obtainable from this Company on approved Real Estate security at the lowest current Rates of Interest.

The Mortgage may be repaid by yearly instalments, or otherwise as may be agreed upon, the interest ceasing at once on all amounts paid on account of the sum borrowed.

WHY

Will people pay rent when houses and lots can be purchased on such easy terms as are offered by the undersigned. Come and inspect our work and see how yourselves how we construct our houses. Our chief aim and study is to build substantial, warm, frost and damp proof houses. I am offering good building lots, and will build solid brick houses, nine-inch walls, strapped and lath, two stories, for less money than you can buy frame or veneered buildings. We cordially invite those who anticipate renting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I've sold given first-class satisfaction, and I am determined that every house I build shall be a standing testimony to honest building. MISREPRESENTATION.

If anything was wanted to prove the convincing nature of the speeches made during the campaign on behalf of the Mowat Government, and the utter demolition of the arguments used by Mr. Carnegie and the Tory party, it would be found in the truculent abuse and misrepresentation heaped upon Mr. Bertram in yesterday's issue of the Review, and for which we hold Mr. Carnegie directly responsible. We know whereof we speak when we say that during this election Mr. Bertram has not made use of one single word of a personal nature towards Mr. Carnegie or anyone else. It is charged against Mr. Bertram that, along with Messrs. Stratton and P. Ryan, he took part in a disgraceful and cowardly plot at the nomination to shut out the Conservative candidate from obtaining a hearing, while the facts are that Mr. Stratton endeavored to make an equitable arrangement with Mr. Carnegie about the speaking, which that gentleman, with his usual courtesy and love of fair play, would not listen to. Mr. Bertram was not present when the nominations were made, knew nothing about what was being done and was not even in town until about three o'clock. Then Mr. Bertram is accused of an unsuccessful attempt to defraud the revenue, and and this is a construction put on a speech which he made last Dominion election, showing the iniquity of the Customs regulations which importers sometimes had to submit to, and is an utterly false conclusion drawn from the argument used and a perversion of the truth.

Then there is another innuendo made of certain grossly improper arrangements with a Railway President by which both were to be benefited, this is only given as a dark hint of some terrible iniquity about which Mr. Carnegie is too tenderhearted and careful of the feelings of others to speech out, plainly; it is only another stab below the belt, another suspicion thrown at the business character of Mr. Bertram, which no doubt business men can appraise at its true value. The gravest insinuation of all, however, is that Mr. Bertram was won over to support Mr. Mowat by obtaining favours from the Government in his lumber operations, and in terror of something that Mr. J. B. McWilliam's was going to do to him. This was met by a square denial at the time it was made and proof challenged, which, if not forthcoming, Mr. Carnegie must lie under the imputation of being a mean, contemptible slanderer. To show the ignorance of what he was speaking about and the malevolence of Mr. Carnegie's insinuation, he is reported in the Review as follows. "But Mr. John Bertram is a lumberman now, and Mr. John B. McWilliams is Crown timber agent, and the latter has it in his power to look at any lumberman's logs, and say they are not sound; I'll reduce the measurement from 16 inches to 12 inches; thus if Mr. Bertram did not wheel into line, Mr. J. B. McWilliams could crack his whip over his head." Mr. McWilliams has charge of this division only and has nothing whatever to do with where Mr. Bertram is operating in Algoma, nor within over 100 miles of it. Abuse and misrepresentation are the penalty which anyone has to pay for taking an active part against the Tory party, who, adopting the vices of their leader, think they have a divine right to govern this country. Meantime the public may judge of the righteousness of a cause which requires to be upheld by such ignoble warfare.

PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

IT DOES NOT MEET WITH FAVOR IN MR. PARNELL'S EYES.

DUBLIN, Dec. 22.—It can be authoritatively stated that Mr. Parnell is convinced that the position of the Irish tenants is worse now than when he introduced his Anti-Eviction Bill. That the plan of campaign has, as asserted, procured abatements in rents where everything else has failed he regards as improbable. He thinks it remarkable that the Government should postpone a coercion bill, as the entire absence of crime leaves no excuse for coercion. The suppression of the Irish National League would eventually result in the formation of secret societies that would rival one another in the commission of crimes and thus necessitate the landlords asking Parliament for further coercive powers. The present situation, says Mr. Parnell, points strongly to the probability of the Government being obliged to introduce a bill reducing rents to the standard fixed by the recent decisions of the Land Commissioners, also admitting lease-holders. The Government's illegal method of reducing rents, through Gen. Fuller's action, failed except where "boycotted" by moonlighters on the plan of campaign. Mr. Parnell will lead a strong attack upon the whole policy and action of the Government towards Ireland at the opening of the coming session of Parliament.

THE FIGHTING NINETIETH.

Reality in Want of Uniforms—Their Visit to Toronto Next June.

The Manitoban says: The proposed trip of the 90th Battalion to Montreal and Toronto next June is looked upon with great favor by the members of the battalion. Should the Canadian Pacific Railway grant low rates the chances are that the trip will be made. A rough plan of it is as follows: Leave Winnipeg Thursday night (June 23) arrive at Ottawa on Sunday morning in time for a church parade with the Foot Guards, leaving for Montreal Sunday night, spending Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the celebration of Her Majesty's jubilee, thence to Toronto in time for Dominion Day, stopping in Toronto until Monday night, giving the members of the battalion a couple of days leave of absence to visit their friends and returning to Winnipeg about Thursday. The above scheme would take about fourteen or fifteen days, and if the enthusiastic members of the 90th take hold of it success will be assured. The question of equipment is the most serious one, the idea of fitting out one of Canada's crack regiments with the cast off accoutrements of the first Red River Expedition! Belts which hardly support their own weight, frogs of antiquated pattern, no knapsacks or great coat straps, and old-fashioned ball bags instead of cartridge boxes. Let the members of the battalion bestir themselves until the authorities grant a new issue of accoutrements for the 90th.

ED. COMING HOME.

THE EX-CHAMPION WILL REACH TORONTO VIA MONTREAL.

Carman Hanlan, who arrived at New York Monday, left there last night on his way home via Montreal, where he will be to-day. Of course the New York papers interviewed the ex-champion. All describe him as looking well. He is reported as having said: I left Australia on Sept. 22 with the intention of meeting Beach in England and running a match with him. I was willing to wager any sum from $500 to $1000 that I could beat him, but he declined all my propositions on the plea that he was compelled to return to America. I challenged Ross and he refused. I suppose because it was plain that I was in pretty good trim. Toomer had already issued a challenge to row me, and I accepted it, but then he suddenly discovered that he couldn't meet me. Then I issued a general challenge to row Matthews, Kemp, Nelson or any other of the Australian oarsmen, but my challenges passed unnoticed. At the juncture Ross and Lee issued a card to the effect that they would row a double scull race with any two men in the world. I talked over the matter with Ten Eyck, and we accepted the challenge. The race was to be rowed on the Thames on Oct. 13 for $1000 a side. Ross and Lee finally backed out. Then a four-oared race was arranged between myself, Toomer, Hamm and Ten Eyck on one side and Perkins, Ross, Lee and Beaber on the other. The stakes were $750 a side, and we rowed on the Thames. My crew won easily. I tried to get on other matches but failed. I journeyed through the north of England and received many testimonials, a number of which were valuable articles of jewelry. I have made a match to row Beach a race for $500 a side on the Nepean River, Australia, some time during June or July next.

PRACTICE VS. PROFESSION.

The respective relations of the Liberals and Conservatives to the course of legislation in the interests of the working classes is briefly explained in the words—Liberal performance, Conservative promise. As has been before pointed out in these columns, the Mowat Administration placed the Ontario Factories Act, which places the factory operatives of Ontario in as good a position, in the matter of protection, as is enjoyed by the laborers in any country in the world, on the statute book. Though the Conservative Dominion Government promised similar legislation in 1883, the bill brought in at that time, has been kicked like a football from session to session, and the only practical steps that have been taken, up to this date, is the appointment of a Dominion Labour Commission, which is so partizan in its composition, and so far short of meeting the views of the Labour Organization, that the Toronto members of that body have utterly repudiated the commission as at present constituted. While the Mowat Government has acted, the Dominion Government has "put off with an eternal promise" the claims of the workingmen, and their clap-trap legislation, begun nearly five years ago, has fizzled out in a partizan commission which will not report for a year or more, and from whose partizan composition one can only hope that whatever action it may take or give rise to, will be in the interests of the Conservative party. Meanwhile the Mowat Administration is quietly keeping in motion the machinery it has originated, and is collecting statistics to form the basis of further legislation, looking to the amelioration of the condition of the working classes. It fully recognizes the rights and privileges they are entitled to, and the right the labour party has to be consulted and asked to assist in the collection of information bearing upon their interests. In proof of this the following correspondence is submitted:—

PETERBOROUGH, Dec. 22nd, 1886.

John O'Brien, Esq., Secretary Assembly 6,952 Knights of Labor:—

DEAR SIR,—I have been requested by the Ontario Government to suggest an intelligent and judicious person to collect statistics of labor and wages in Peterborough this year. I would be pleased if the Knights of Labor of this vicinity would nominate a fit and proper person to perform the duties, as out of your body a fully capable man can easily be selected, and one who will have the full confidence of the Order. Kindly attend to this matter at once and bring it before the proper authorities, and oblige,

Yours truly,
J. R. STRATTON.

P. S.—I will be glad to assist any person you may appoint in the performance of his duties. J. R. S.

THE PRESENT ISSUE.

It is well for the electors of the West Riding to bear in mind that in the present contest, the true issue which the people should pronounce upon is that based on the record of the Mowat Administration, as against that of the Opposition. But the imported issues makes it a direct fight between the Provincial and Dominion Governments. Sir John Macdonald concluded his speech in Toronto on Tuesday night last, by calling on his supporters to strengthen his hands, and he significantly added, "You cannot strengthen my hands better than by changing the Government of Ontario." Everybody knows what this means. It means that the electors are called upon to place the Province of Ontario in slavery at the feet of Sir John Macdonald. If the people intrust the guardianship of the Province of Ontario to the hands of Mr. Meredith there is no earthly doubt that he will be a mere puppet in the hands of Sir John Macdonald Let the people, if they will, retain the latter in power at Ottawa, but let them pause long before they place the Province of Ontario at the mercy of the corrupt and venal oligarchy which rules at Ottawa. Let them pause before they subject this Province to the evil influences of boodleism, financial extravagance and waste that hold high riot at the Dominion capital, which they will do if they vote against the Mowat Government. This administration has been the strong wall that has repelled the attacks of the Ottawa raiders upon the constitutional rights and territorial integrity of the Province of Ontario. When Mr. Mowat was fighting with all his powers against Sir John's attempt to rob this Province of one hundred thousand square miles of territory, with untold wealth in minerals and timber, Mr. Meredith at the bidding of Sir John Macdonald, placed all his personal efforts and all the debating and voting power of his followers in opposition to the demands and rights of this province. Mr. Mowat had not only to fight an open enemy but a traitorous band within the provincial camp. The right of the province to the minerals and timber in the new territory is still disputed by Sir John and Mr. Meredith is still ready to give the enemy of Ontario all his assistance. Mr. Mowat is still determined that he will not budge a single inch, in yielding one iota of the rights of this province. The question now is are the people of this province prepared to turn out an honest and capable Administration to give place to a cabinet, whose access to power is sought to be gained by the Ottawa clique, which is determined to rob and humiliate this Province. Let the people take a broad view of the momentous issues involved in the present contest. The petty sectarian issues, the attempts to stir up religious strife, the petty cavillings against the legislation of the Ontario Government, to which Mr. Meredith and his followers were consenting parties, and as such, must bear their share of the blame, if blame there be—all these clap-trap cries are but devices to delude the electors and obscure the true issues on which they are required to pronounce. Don't be deceived. The object of the Opposition is to secure power at any sacrifice of principle or truth, and you must bear in mind that they do not seek power to advance the interests of this Province, but to serve the political purposes of the bitterest enemy of Ontario, Sir John Macdonald, who not only turns the whole power of his departments against the Mowat Government, but who has, there is in every reason to believe, during his recent tour made arrangements to make substantial appeals to the weak-kneed electors of close constituencies, and there is no reason to doubt that West Peterborough has come in for its share of this sort of attention. Electors, sweep away the mists of prejudice that have been raised before your eyes, go to the polls determined to loyally vote for the best interests of your province, and to denounce by your ballots the huge conspiracy with Ottawa, designed to place this province under the sway of Federal politicians. Vote for Mr. Mowat the tried true and trusty friend of your province and show Mr. Meredith that if he wants the provincial reins of power he must appeal to you in his own name, in his own strength and not as the lieutenant of Sir John Macdonald, who, no matter what the merits of his Federal Administration may be, is the pronounced, openly declared and bitter enemy of Ontario autonomy and Ontario interests.

Our evening contemporary is strongly excited and annoyed over the result of the nomination proceedings, and its annoyance finds vent in the most scurrilous and disgraceful issue ever published in the town of Peterborough. If the Conservative candidate feels aggrieved he has only himself to thank. He refused to agree upon arrangements in regard to time, which might have been made mutually satisfactory. Up to within the past few days the contest has been conducted with a comparative freedom from personalities, but last evening's issue of the organ was a monumental disgrace, whose basest feature was the fact that the bitter personal attacks had no bearing on the real issue before the electors. Messrs. Stratton and Carnegie are the candidates, but the issue is not entirely a personal one as between them—the real issue is between the Mowat Administration and the Ontario Opposition and its Ottawa allies, or rather masters. It is no surprise that leading Conservatives denounce the course of the organ as disgraceful, and in no mild terms either. Journalistic, as well as personal, blackguardism is frowned down by all respectable citizens.

BUFFALO, Dec. 21.—In the Court of Sessions Nicholas Jemison of Brant is on trial for seduction under promise of marriage. The complaining witness is Laura Pattison, a pretty Indian girl, 16 years old. The defendant is also an Indian, and his counsel, LeRoy Andrus, expects a verdict for his client on the ground that an Indian cannot make a valid contract, either matrimonially or otherwise. Laura told her story on the witness stand this morning.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw41tf

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Kitty retired in disgrace, and Mrs. Presty sharpened her tongue on Mr. Sarrazin next. "I'm astonished, sir, at your allowing that impudent grandchild of mine to take such liberties with you. Who would suppose that you were a married man, with children of your own?"

"That's just the reason, my dear madam," Mr. Sarrazin smartly replied. "I romp with my own children—why not with Kitty. Can I do anything for you in London?" he went on, getting a little nearer to the door; "I leave Edinburgh by the next train. And I promise you," he added, with the spirit of mischief twinkling in his eyes, "this shall be my last confidential interview with your grandchild. When she wants to ask any more questions I transfer her to you."

Mrs. Presty looked after the retreating lawyer thoroughly mystified. What "confidential interview?" What "questions?" Was this one more lamentable case of a respectable man overtaken by liquor? "Scotch whisky!" she suddenly concluded; "I thought he smelt of spirits when he first came in."

CHAPTER XXXI.

Of the friends and neighbors who had associated with Herbert Linley in bygone days not more than two or three kept up their intimacy with him at the later time of his disgrace. Those few, it is needless to say, were men.

One of the faithful companions who had not shrunk from him yet had just left the London hotel at which Linley had taken rooms for Sydney Westerfield and himself—in the name of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert. This old friend had been shocked by the change for the worse which he perceived in the fugitive master of Mount Morven. Linley's stout figure of former times had fallen away as if he had suffered under long illness; his healthy color had faded; he made an effort to assume the hearty manner that had once been natural to him, which was simply pitiable to see. "After sacrificing all that makes life truly decent and truly enjoyable for a woman, he has got nothing, not even false happiness, in return!" With that dreary conclusion that retiring visitor descended the hotel steps and went his way along the street.

Linley returned to the newspaper which he had been reading when his friend was shown into the room.

Line by line he followed the progress of the law report, which informed its thousands of readers that his wife had divorced him and had taken lawful possession of his child. Word by word he dwelt with morbid attention on the terms of crushing severity in which the lord president had spoken of Sydney Westerfield and of himself. Sentence by sentence he read the reproof inflicted on the unhappy woman whom he had vowed to love and cherish. And then—even then—urged by his own self-tormenting suspicion, he looked for more. On the opposite page there was a leading article, presenting comments on the trial, written in a tone of lofty and virtuous regret, taking the wife's side against the judge, but declaring, at the same time, that no condemnation of the conduct of the husband and the governess could be too merciless, and no misery that might overtake them in the future more than they had deserved.

He threw the newspaper on the table at his side and thought over what he had read.

If he had done nothing else, he had drained the bitter cup to the dregs. When he looked back he saw nothing but the life that he had wasted. When his thoughts turned to the future they confronted a prospect empty of all promise to a man still in the prime of life. Wife and child were as completely lost to him as if they had been dead—and it was the wife's doing. Had he any right to complain? Not the shadow of a right. As the newspapers said, he had deserved it.

The clock roused him, striking the hour.

He rose hurriedly and advanced toward the window. As he crossed the room he passed by a mirror. His own sullen despair looked at him in the reflection of his face. "She will be back directly," he remembered; "she mustn't see me like this!" He went on to the window to divert his mind (and so to clear his face) by watching the stream of life flowing by in the busy street. Artificial cheerfulness, assumed love in Sydney's presence—that was what his life had come to already.

If he had known that she had gone out, seeking a temporary separation, with his fear of self-betrayal—if he had suspected that she too had thoughts which must be concealed—sad foreboding of losing her hold on his heart, terrifying suspicions that he was already comparing her, to her own disadvantage, with the wife whom he had deserted—if so he had made these discoveries what would the end have been? But she had thus far escaped the danger of exciting his distrust. That she loved him, he knew. That she had begun to doubt his attachment to her he would not have believed if his oldest friend had declared it on the best evidence. She had said to him that morning, at breakfast, "There was a good woman, who took me in lodgings here in London, and who was very kind to me when I was a child," and she had asked leave to go to the house and inquire if that friendly landlady was still living—with nothing visibly constrained in her smile, and with no faltering tone in her voice. It was not until she was out in the street that the telltale tears came into her eyes, and the bitter sigh broke from her and mingled its inaudible misery with the grand rise and fall of the tumult of London life. While he was still at the window he saw her crossing the street on her way back to him. She came into the room with her complexion heightened by exercise; she kissed him, and said, with her pretty smile: "Have you been lonely without me?" Who would have suspected that the torment of distrust and the dread of desertion were busy at this woman's heart?

He placed a chair for her, and, seating himself by her side, asked if she felt tired. Every attention that she could wish for from the man whom she loved, was offered with every appearance of sincerity on the surface! She met him half way and disarmed us if her mind was quite at ease.

"No, dear, I'm not tired—but I'm glad to get back."

"Did you find your old landlady still alive?"

"Yes. But oh, the sad, sad things I had to hear since I last saw her!"

"Your former companions, as usual?"

"Oh! no. She looked at me and I knew in great anxiety what she was thinking of. I was too sad. I could not trust myself with her. I only told her who I was. Ah, it was a melancholy meeting for both of us. She burst out crying when I kissed her, and I had to tell her that my mother was dead and my brother lost to me in spite of every effort to find him. I asked to go into the kitchen, thinking the change would be a relief to both of us. The kitchen used to be a paradise to me in those old days; it was so warm to a half-starved child—and I always got something to eat when I was there. You have no idea, Herbert, how poor and how empty the place looked to me now. I was glad to get out of it and go up-stairs. There was a lumber-room at the top of the house; I used to play in it, all by myself. More changes met me the moment I opened the door."

"Changes for the better?"

"My dear, it couldn't have changed for the worse! My dirty old play-room was cleaned and repainted, the lumber taken away, and a nice little bed in one corner. Some clerk in the city had taken the room—I shouldn't know known it again. But there was another surprise waiting for me; a happy surprise this time. In clearing out the garret, what do you think the landlady found? Try to guess."

Anything to please her! Anything to make her think that he was as fond of her as ever! "Was it something you had left behind you," he said, "at the time when you lodged there?"

"Yes! you are right at the first guess—a little memorial of my father. Only some torn, crumpled leaves from a book of children's songs that he used to teach me to sing; and a small packet of his letters, which my mother may have thrown aside and forgotten. See! I have brought them back with me; I mean to look over the letters at once—but this doesn't interest you."

"Indeed it does."

He made that considerate reply mechanically, as if he was thinking of something else. She was afraid to tell him plainly that she saw this; but she could venture to say that he was not looking well. "I have noticed it for some time past," she confessed. "You have been accustomed to live in the country; I am afraid London doesn't agree with you."

He admitted that she might be right; still speaking absently, still thinking of the divorce. She laid the packet of letters and the poor relics of the old song-book on the table and bent over him. Tenderly and a little timidly she put her arm round his neck. "Let us try some purer air," she suggested; "the seaside might do you good. Don't you think so?"

"I daresay, my dear. Where shall we go?"

"Oh, I leave that to you."

"No, Sydney. It was I who proposed coming to London. You shall decide this time."

She submitted and promised to think of it. Leaving him with the first expression of trouble that had shown itself in her face she took up the songs and put them into the pocket of her dress. On the point of removing the letters next, she noticed the newspaper on the table. "Anything interesting to-day?" she asked, and drew the newspaper toward her to look at it. He took it from her suddenly—almost roughly. The next moment he apologized for his rudeness. "There is nothing worth reading in the paper," he said, after begging her pardon. "You don't care about politics, do you?"

Instead of answering she looked at him attentively.

The heightened color, which told of recent exercise, healthily enjoyed, faded from her face. She was silent; she was pale. A little confused, he smiled uneasily. "Surely," he resumed, trying to speak gayly, "I haven't offended you?"

"There is something in the newspaper," she said, "which you don't want me to read."

He denied it—but he still kept the newspaper in his own possession. Her voice sank low; her face turned paler still.

"Is it all over?" she asked. "And is it put in the newspaper?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean the divorce."

He went back again to the window and looked out. It was the easiest excuse that he could devise for keeping his face turned away from her. She followed him.

"I don't want to read it, Herbert. I only ask you to tell me if you are a free man again."

Quiet as it was, her tone left him no alternative but to treat her brutally or to reply. Still looking out at the street, he said "Yes."

"Free to marry, if you like?" she persisted.

He said "yes" once more—and kept his face steadily turned away from her. She waited awhile. He neither moved nor spoke.

Surviving the slow death little by little of all her other illusions, one last hope had lingered in her heart. It was killed by that cruel look, fixed on the view of the street.

"I'll try to think of a place that we can go to at the seaside." Having said those words she slowly moved away to the door, and turned back, remembering the packet of letters. She took it up, paused, and looked toward the window. The street still interested him. She left the room.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two specialists trusses made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sure; and 90 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. Knights of Labor Platform.

Endorsed by the Liberal Candidate.

The following correspondence is self-explanatory:

J. R. Stratton Candidate for the Local Legislature:—

DEAR SIR,—At a regular meeting of Assembly 6,262, K. of L., of Peterborough, held on Dec. 15th 1886, it was unanimously resolved that although we cannot promise our undivided support to either of the candidates) as the parties are at present constituted) still, having a wish to see certain measures become law, we wish to lay our platform before you, stating that a favorable answer may secure some votes.

Our platform is

1. Manhood suffrage.
2. No more assisted emigration.
3. Prison labor not to come in contact with honest labor either on Government works or otherwise.
4. A law making it imperative on railway companies to provide better security for their employees.
5. A law making it a criminal offence, punishable by law (by imprisonment) to ask or receive more than 7 per cent per annum for the use of money.

Now, Sir, if elected, will you use your utmost endeavors to have the above become law even if you have to vote against your party.

Please answer from the platform on the day of nomination, and oblige,

Yours truly,
JOHN O'BRIEN, R.S.

A copy has been sent to each candidate.

To this the following answer has been forwarded:—

PETERBOROUGH, Dec. 22nd, 1886.

John O'Brien, Esq:—

DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of your favour of Dec. 20th, and in reply would say that if elected, which I believe I will be by the assistance of the support of your order, I would say that—

I will advocate the adoption of Manhood Suffrage as I stated at the nomination and at all my meetings in this country.

I will oppose all expenditures to import labour at the public expense to compete with Canadian working men.

I believe in the impropriety of prison labour being brought into competition, with honest labour in any shape or form and will endeavor to prevent such state of affairs.

I am strongly in favour of all railway corporations being compelled by law to protect the lives and limbs of their employees to the fullest possible extent.

With regard to the proposal to make the collection of more than 7 per cent interest a criminal offence, I shall feel it my duty to give my vote if called upon to do so, in favour of the proposal, without reference to party lines, but this matter belongs to Dominion politics and not local.

Hoping that the above answers to the questions involved in your platform may meet your views, I have the honor to remain.

Yours very faithfully,
J. R. STRATTON.

The College Graduates.

Students of Peterborough Business College Receive Their Diplomas and Prizes—Closing Exercises.

Another term of the Peterborough Business College, of which Mr. Bannell Sawyer is the efficient principal, has been brought to a successful close. At 10.30 this morning the pupils and a number of friends assembled at the College chambers, which were nicely decorated, and were diverted for a couple of hours by an instructive and entertaining programme. Mr. Bannell Sawyer occupied the chair. A college song opened the exercises, followed by an able address to the graduates by Principal Sawyer.

Mr. E. B. STONE, barrister, in a brief speech, said he had always been a friend of this College and knew that it was doing good work, and deserved the encouragement of every ratepayer in Peterborough town and county. He knew that such a training was useful to all, and regretted that when he was young he had not had the advantage of a commercial training.

Mr. T. ALLUM expressed great great pleasure with the work that was being done in the commercial College here. He knew, for his part, that his nephew, who had just taken the general proficiency prize, had made great improvement since coming there; and he would be ever ready to speak in high terms of the College.

Mr. REID, Otonabee, said he was sure that it was a great advantage for these young people to have such a training as they got in a Business College. When he was a young man there were no such schools, not even a common school near by.

A number of essays on "Success" were then read by the pupils, and the prize awarded to Thomas Allum. The judges were Messrs. E. B. Stone, barrister; Mr. Wier, head master of Fenelon Falls school; and Mr. Cheate.

After another college song the granting of diplomas and prizes took place. Following are the names and percentages of the successful graduates:—Thos. Allum, 85 percent; Hugh Lackie, 82; Kenneth McClelland, 79; Francis White, 68; Wm. Wright, 67; Miss E. Keels (not present), 86.

The Dr. Potts general proficiency prize was awarded to Mr. Thos. Allum. The following subjects are comprised in the general proficiency studies:—Book-keeping, business forms, correspondence, commercial law, commercial arithmetic, mental arithmetic, banking, bank book-keeping, advertising, practical grammer, business practice, package marking, foreign exchange and composition.

At a previous examination in stenography Mr. A Bell had shown a speed of 103 words per minute, and Miss Smith 104.

The validictory was read by Mr. Hugh Lackie, Miss Giles gave a recitation "The Fisherman's Daughter," which was followed by another college song.

Principal Sawyer closed the proceedings in a short address, urging upon the graduates to feel confidence in their own abilities to make their way in the world, but never be above receiving advice.

The college opens for business again on January 3rd.

A Southern Romance.

The "Planter's Wife" at the Opera House—The New Play a Great Success.

Shortly previous to the American civil war, Col. Albert Graham, a Southern planter, met, loved, and married Edith Gray, a charming young Northern belle. Edith had a history, briefly as follows. Years before, she had been inveigled into a marriage with one Harry Livingstone, an unprincipled villian, and upon her refusing to participate in his wicked schemes, was sent to gaol on a trumped-up charge of larceny. Here she remained for a number of years, until news was received of Livingstone's death, when she was set at liberty. Then she became the happy wife of the Southern planter, and lived contentedly until her first husband, whom she supposed to be dead, appeared upon the scene under an assumed name, and by threats forced the unfortunate wife to yield up important papers. But this act of compulsion is witnessed by Simeon Simcoe, the humorous light of the play, who afterwards turns his knowledge to good account in assisting to free Edith from the toils of Livingstone. The first marriage is proved to have been a false one, and the play winds up in the usual manner—villain bounced, wrong made right, husband and wife happy and content. A deep vein of humor, of which Mr. Geo. Woodward, as "Simeon Simcoe," takes the lead, runs throughout the play, while the emotional part was ably portrayed by Miss Lindeman as "Edith Gray" and Mr. Bertram as "Col. Graham," her husband. Livingston, the villain of the plot, was well taken by Mr. Carl Smith, who has an apparent adaptation for this line of dramatic impersonation. Miss Amy Stratton as "Angie Gordon," too young to have a beau, and Miss McKeon, as "Aggie Sumac," her mother, did full justice to their parts, as did also Miss Malpolm, as "Dora Graham," a Southern heiress. Last, but not least, come "Arthur Blake," a prisoner of war, (Bassett Willard), "Uncle Jos," who always lived in the family, (J. H. Rowland), and "John Walters," an important witness, (Jos. Cooper). The play was entirely successful and received a scriptural measure of approbation. To-night "The Widow Hunt," an 18-carat, all wool and a yard wide comedy of the first water, will be presented, when a bumper house should be accorded the Woodward Dramatic Company. Prices, 10, 20 and 30 cents.

A Barn Burnt.

About 11.30 last night a small barn on the premises owned by Mr. M. McFadden, sr., on Smith street, occupied by Mr. Jordon, was totally consumed by fire. The contents, including three head of cattle, a quantity of hay, straw and wood, were also lost. Mr. Jordan's son had been in the barn during the evening with a lantern, and it is conjectured this was indirectly the cause of the fire. The building and contents were uninsured, and Mr. Jordan will feel the loss heavily. His house was also somewhat damaged, the proximity of the flames rendering it necessary to almost deluge it with water. Had a high wind been blowing nothing could have saved it, and probably others would have been consumed with it. The firemen were on the scene in good time, but their services were not required, the fire burning so fiercely that in a few minutes all was over.

Christmas Presents.

Messrs. Breese & Bain are showing a very complete stock of stoves, lamps, cutlery and brass goods. The following speaks for itself:

PERTH, Dec. 20th, 1886.

Peterboro' Steam & Furnace Co.

GENTLEMEN,—The Cooking Range Mystic which I am using in my house is giving every satisfaction. The oven is as near perfection as I think it possible to get. The amount of coal consumed in 24 hours I consider very small—only two ordinary scuttles. I find it very simple and easily managed in every way. I might also add that the ball stove "Rideau" is ahead of anything I have ever had for giving heat, and like the "Mystic" is easily managed.

"(signed) JNO. MCMASTER."

The Election Won!

A few weeks ago Bellegheem, the Famous Furniture Factor, became a candidate, and the public have deposited their ballots (got from the bank) so rapidly, that he is triumphantly elected, and he has secured his seat. But he is not selfish, and he has a seat for everybody that comes. In prospect of two elections, Bellegheem can quote wholesale prices for seats and all other kinds of furniture. Free and independent electors, be independent and each get a seat for yourself, and get it at Bellegheem's.

Harvey.

I noticed in the Review an account of the meeting held at Lakehurst in which I am spoken of as the leader of the Reform party here. Now I am not leader of the Reform or any other party here, but I have the honour to belong to the Liberal-Reform party here. On Dec. 10th I went to hear Mr. Carnegie give an account of his stewardship, but after two hours spouting, he showed where he had brought in two amendments in the House in three years. His time was spent in abusing the Government, which course did him more harm than good here. At the close of his dreary two hours I simply asked him what he had been doing, but he could tell nothing he had done or would do. I should think he would be ashamed to come to Harvey for votes. For some time he has owned land here, which was assessed at from 10 to 12 cents per acre. Last year he was assessed as usual and his schedule sent to him, which he returned, with the statement that he would pay no more money into the township treasury. He has asked for our votes, but he won't get them. We want a man of principle to represent us in Toronto.

Release of Father Eaher.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—Father Faher, who early in September was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for refusing to give bail for good behavior, was to-day released unconditionally from the Galway jail. Father Fahey interceded with a land agent named Lewis for a number of tenants who were threatened with eviction, and Lewis accused him of having threatened his life. The magistrate ordered Father Fahey to give bail for good behavior or go to jail. He refused to furnish bail for the reason that it would be regarded as an admission that the charge against him was true. He was accordingly imprisoned. The priest met with an ovation on his release. The city of Galway will be illuminated to-night in his honor.

Barns in Welland County Burned.

RIDGEWAY, Dec. 23.—Early this morning the barn owned by Jacob Mains, a farmer living about a mile from this village, was destroyed by fire. The contents, including farming implements, two horses and several cows, also a quantity of hay and grain, were consumed. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, as tracks were seen leading from the barn into the adjoining woods. Loss, about $1000; insured in the B. & W. Farmers' Insurance Company for $600.

Ottawa Items.

OTTAWA, Dec. 23.—Principal McCabe of the Normal School, who had been very seriously ill, is improving in health but it is thought it will be a good while before he will be able to be about.

Premier Sullivan and Hon. Mr. Ferguson, P.E.I., expect to leave for home early this week. They are satisfied with the outcome of their visit to the capital.

Loss of a Steamship.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The steamship Llanelly, sailing from Liverpool, has foundered at Holyhead. Two persons were drowned.

McQuade Sentenced.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—Ex-Ald. McQuade has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment and a fine of $5000.

McQuade's counsel, late this afternoon, served District-Attorney Martine with a notice of appeal in his case to be taken to the general term of the Supreme Court, which meets next month. This will have no effect to prevent the prisoner being sent to Sing Sing.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is accepted by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns, from the tender aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painless corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, does not go feeling around a man's foot, but goes to business at once, and effects a cure. Don't be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Get "Putnam's," and no other. 6d51

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 30c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 20 per cent higher.

TO DEPOSITORS—Deposits are received by this Company both on current account and for periods of one year or longer. The rate of interest paid on amounts deposited on current account and which may be withdrawn by cheque in such sums as the depositor may from time to time require, is FOUR per cent., either paid or compounded half-yearly, and the rate on yearly deposits is FIVE per cent.

TO INVESTORS—The five and ten year FIVE PER CENT DEBENTURES of this Company which are issued in denominations of $100, $200, $400 and $500 each, form a desirable investment, while half-yearly interest Coupons attached, payable at the Head Office of the Company in Peterborough, or at any Branch of the Bank of Toronto in Canada, afford a safe and convenient mode of investment.

The funds of the Company being invested in first mortgages on Real Estate, no better security can be offered to depositors or debenture holders, they having a first claim on more than the whole Assets of the Company, the shareholders having the second. The capital stock paid up and that the amount so invested was over $900,000, and on the security of real estate at least double that value.

DISREPUTABLE TACTICS.

Mr. Kendry's "solemn declaration" on its face has a very dark look, and the more his "solemn declaration," is considered, the more flimsy and absurd its character.

Mr. Bertram gave a denial to the statement as it was made viz., that it was his declared intention to stump the county against Mr. Mowat. If the latter were true, he must have looked forward to doing so with Mr. Carnegie and even his most violent and virulent detractors of Mr. Bertram could not truthfully charge him with such degradation.

The position occupied by Mr. Bertram in the present contest was very clearly defined when he first appeared on the platform and it was to the effect that whilst he did not approve of every act of the Mowat Administration, he approved of their general policy and their record, and that having only a choice between Mr. Meredith and Mr. Mowat, that choice must be in favor of the latter, and therefore he would support Mr. Stratton.

The repetition of any statement, such as is incorporated in Mr. Kendry's "solemn declaration," is most misleading and contrary to the true meaning of the expressions used at the time and is false and dishonourable.

When Mr. Kendry made his statement at the nomination, he was asked by Mr. Bertram to go into the witness box and be cross-examined on his statement, so that the absolute truth might be elicited.

With great prudence and judgment, Mr. Kendry refused to do so in a most cowardly manner and when Mr. Kendry with his solemn declaration went to one lawyer after another in town who declined to take it, one of them telling him they did not believe it, it allows the high estimation in which Mr. Kendry is held by his fellow-citizens especially by those men who have the best means of knowing the credibility of any witness.

The venom of the "solemn declaration" fraudulently believed to be true, is not however in the assertion that Mr. Bertram declared he would stump the county, but in the representation that he uttered certain opprobrious epithets towards his Catholic fellow citizens.

The whole "solemn declaration" is a low electioneering dodge unworthy of Bowery politicians. In its malevolent side, it is a fruitless attempt to stir up a hatred against a prominent Reformer, in the minds of Catholics, to assist Mr. Carnegie, but it has failed, as all such dishonest tactics will and must fail.

Mr. Kendry can rest assured that the majority of the people feel nothing but contempt for himself in prostituting his honor to the interests of the domineering Mogul of the Auburn Woolen Company.

Mr. Ullyott is too well known in this community to need any defence from us on the second hand slander which Mr. Kendry has sought to place on him. Mr. Ullyott is reported as having said that he "has not much religion." If the reader will make a very simple change of words and read "he does not make much profession of religion," and then leave out the vituperative clause at the end, he will read a sentiment that every one will approve of.

BUTLER WOULDN'T GO

LADY CAMPBELL'S VAIN APPEAL TO THE GENERAL TO GIVE EVIDENCE.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The conduct of Gen. Butler in refusing to testify in the Campbell divorce case is still a fruitful topic of conversation. Gen. Butler is in France. His solicitor, Mr. Geo. Lewis, made every effort to induce him to return, but without success. Lady Campbell wrote to him as follows: "Dear General Butler—You will remember that Mr. Lewis in my presence at his office proposed for your own convenience that you should be examined in regard to the case now pending. You said it would be unnecessary as you intended to return to England and appear in person at the trial. This was obviously desirable in the interest of your own character that nothing further could then have been urged upon you, and it is therefore with profound amazement that I now learn you have changed this intention. You must know that your failure to appear at the trial will inflict a monstrous injustice upon me and put me to a cruel and unnecessary trouble in vindication of my character from unfounded references drawn by my enemies and yours, from the single fact of your having called upon me in Lord Colin's house. These inferences can be instantly dissipated by a single straightforward and manly denial on your part, and this denial I have a right to expect from you as a friend, a gentleman and a soldier. Hoping soon to learn that you have resumed your original intention to appear in person, I remain, yours truly——."

The following curt reply was received: "Dear Lady Colin Campbell, I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th November, and in reply I can only repeat that my resolution of not appearing in evidence at the forthcoming trial remains unchanged."

Lady Colin made a strong appeal to Lady Butler, who is the celebrated artist, and received the following answer:

"Dear Lady Colin Campbell: I beg to say I am fully aware of all the efforts you have made and have caused to be made to induce my husband to appear and give evidence on oath at your trial. Your appeal to me touched me deeply. I would I could help you, but I believe the case to have passed out of our hands, and to have gone before a tribunal where human aid is impossible.

"I remain, sincerely yours,
"ELIZABETH BUTLER."

STREET CAR TIE-UP IN BROOKLYN.

A Policeman Who Tries to Drive Strikers From a Car Badly Beaten.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Eleven of the branches of the Brooklyn City Railroad tied up this morning. The cause is that the company refused to agree to the demands of the men as set forth in an agreement submitted by a committee of the men. President Lewis says that though the Knights of Labor violated the agreement of last spring, the company has maintained good faith with its men. About 8 o'clock twenty-five of the old drivers and conductors returned to work without solicitation from the company. By 9 a.m. about a dozen cars were running.

About dark an amicable arrangement was come to and cars are again running.

Policeman Duffee was on Throopsavenue when he saw the driver of a D[illegible] car attacked by a [illegible] the mob believed to be Edward Davis, seized Duffee's club and beat the latter on the head with it. The policeman drew his revolver and fired. The bullet struck the man in the back and he was taken away by his friends. One of the strikers seized the policeman's revolver and while Duffee was fleeing from the mob fired a shot at him, but the bullet missed the mark it was meant for and the policeman finally took shelter in a drug store.

MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

A Merchant Shot Dead While Being Driven to His Home.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 23.—W. S. Combs, a merchant of Stockbridge, came to Atlanta on Tuesday and ordered a large supply of goods. He took the midnight train and started for home. At Stockbridge he was met by his driver and disappeared in the darkness. It was daylight before the driver reached home with Combs sitting dead in the buggy beside him. His story is that as they were passing through a dense woods some one fired from ambush. The first fire missed, when the horse was whipped up. A second and third shot was fired, both striking Coombs in the back. There are many conflicting reports as to the perpetrators of the deed and the cause. A man named Wilson has been arrested and charged with the crime. It is feared Wilson may be lynched. Combs was a man of great energy and universally liked.

The Feds at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—Of seven contestants to-day in the 72-hour walking match Guerrero, who was in the lead last night, is quite lame. Hegelman is doing the great work of the day. Stroke is also going fast. The score at 2 p.m. was: Stroke, 217 miles; Hughes, 216; Guerrero, 215; Hegelman, 209 miles 7 laps; Vint, 209 miles 2 laps; Golden, 198 miles; Elson, 186 miles.

On account of lameness Guerrero was forced to retire from the walking contest, after making 261 miles and two laps. Hegelman did the best work during the day, rapidly gaining on Hughes for second place, and passing him between 5 and 6 o'clock. The score at 11 o'clock to-night was: Vint, 348 miles; Stroke, 350 miles, 6 laps; Hegleman, 357 miles, 8 laps; Golden, 336 miles, 7 laps; Elson, 337 miles, 11 laps; Hughes, 351 miles, 7 lap.

They Had a Friend on the Bench.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—Messrs. Dillon, Sheehy, Harris and O'Brien reached Loughrea to-day and attended court. They formally justified their charge of assault and battery against Police Inspector Davis, who was responsible for their arrest last week. The court decided the charges against the four gentlemen for their conduct at Loughrea insufficient to justify their prosecution, and they were thereupon discharged. The presiding magistrate was John P. Nolan, Nationalist Member of Parliament.

Can't Convict an Indian.

BUFFALO, Dec. 23.—Nicholas Jamison of Grant, the Indian who was tried for seducing Laura Pattison under promise of marriage, was found not guilty by the Court of Sessions jury this morning. The jury probably thought that a conviction would not have held anyway, for there is a law nullifying all contracts made by Indians.

Burglars' Fruitless Work.

MEDINA, Ohio, Dec. 23.—Early this morning five men overpowered Marshal Frazier and proceeded to the court house and attempted to blow open a safe containing $20,000. After three hours' fruitless work they abandoned the undertaking and escaped. A vigorous search for them was instituted, but without result.

No Holidays for Gun Makers.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—The War Ministry is hastening the production of repeating rifles. The Post states that the workmen in the factories at Spandau have been refused the usual Christmas holidays.

Prize Fighters Fined.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Burke and Masters, the prize fighters who were arrested in the ring on Staten Island yesterday morning, were to-day fined $12 each.

CHURCHILL RESIGNS!

IT CREATES A GREAT SENSATION IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill caused a profound sensation here. The reasons that led to it and Lord Salisbury's stand in upholding the estimates for the army and navy as prepared by the ministers of those respective departments, it is believed, indicate that the ministry is of the opinion that war is imminent. It is the intention of the Government to soon inaugurate extensive naval and military preparations with a view to making its influence felt on the continent.

Churchill Was a Skilful Leader.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Times says it is possible for Lord Salisbury to go on with an Administration constructed on the lines of the present one, but without Lord Randolph Churchill's aid. Lord Randolph Churchill was much more than Chancellor of the Exchequer—he was leader of the House of Commons, and the autumn session showed that, whatever may be his quality as a financier, he has in a high degree the gift of managing men, and especially of guiding a heavily organized and impressionable popular assembly. No statesman who does not possess that gift can lead the House of Commons to any good purpose, and, unless the House is shortly lost, even a great and loyal majority will not avail to save a Ministry from disaster.

Sir M. Hicks-Beach will probably retake the Chancellorship, which he held under the last Tory Administration.

The Conservative Association in Lord Randolph Churchill's constituency is arranging for the appointment of a committee to call upon Lord Randolph and demand of him an explanation of his conduct. An informal meeting of Gladstonians was held at the National Liberal Club to-night. There was much rejoicing over the prospective breaking up of the Conservative-Unionists' coalition and the hope was expressed that the gradual rapprochement of the Churchill-Chamberlain alliance to the Gladstonians will result in the overthrow of the Government.

The News in Dublin.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—The resignation of Lord Churchill was proclaimed through the streets of Dublin this morning by a bell man. The populace showed enthusiasm over the news.

A Limerick Estimate.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—The Mayor of Limerick, presiding at a meeting of the Irish National League to-night, said the resignation of Lord Churchill would lead to the return of the Liberals to power and to Home Rule for Ireland.

The Queen Favors Hartington.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Lord Hartington will return to London immediately and until he arrives the Marquis of Salisbury will remain quiescent. It is thought improbable that Lord Hartington will accept the office, as Mr. Chamberlain and a majority of the Unionist leaders object to his so doing. On the other hand it is learned from a reliable source that the Queen will use the utmost pressure to induce him to join the Ministry and become Conservative leader in the House of Commons, believing that he alone can neutralize the effect of Lord Randolph Churchill's course. If Lord Hartington refuses to take office the [illegible] from Sir Michael Hicks-Beach to Sir Edward Stanhope, the present Chief Secretary, to the Irish Chief Secretaryship.

Lord Salisbury was aware of Lord Randolph Churchill's decision yesterday morning, and the matter was whispered at a ball given at Hatfield House last evening. Lord Randolph's premature divulgence of his decision to the Times is considered a breach of faith.

Comments of the Press.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The St. James' Gazette says if financial reasons explain Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation from the Cabinet there is nothing to be said except that there is not much to be deplored, but if the local government bill was the cause then the Government has grievously erred.

The Echo says it believes Churchill's resignation was due to essential divergences of opinion with the rest of the Cabinet.

The Evening News says the patriots are pained and surprised. It asks Churchill to justify his course, warning him that if he does not his name will never be heard hereafter without exciting exasperation.

The Globe says it would be difficult for the warmest admirers of Lord Churchill to vindicate his step.

The Pall Mall Gazette declares that it will be impossible for Lord Salisbury to govern unless Lord Hartington steps into the breach. It says it is impossible to conceive of any hypothesis upon which Lord Hartington could defend, morally or politically, a refusal to accept the post which Lord Randolph Churchill has vacated. The Queen sent her private secretary to London to-day with a message for Lord Salisbury.

THE POPE'S PROTEST.

The Holy See Despoiled of the Last Remnants of Its Patrimony.

ROME, Dec. 23.—The Pope, receiving the Christmas congratulations from the College of Cardinals, spoke at some length of the position of the church in Italy. He protested against the anti-clerical movement which is being carried on in the country and said the Holy See was now despoiled of the last remnants of its patrimony. The only liberty left to him was that held by the Roman Pontiffs in the earliest ages. The Italian Government, he declared, assisting the laity in unduly interfering with the administration of the church, had expelled the religious bodies and had tolerated an organized hostility against the Vatican. As the head of the church he must continue to protest against the position in which he is placed.

He Died Beside His Victim.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Dec. 23.—Wm. Warner, well known in this city, had been quite intimate with Mrs. Mary Lynch, a young married woman. A few weeks ago Mrs. Lynch went to her mother, who lives near Newtown. Last evening Warner called to see her, and during a quarrel Warner shot Mrs. Lynch through the heart. He then left the house. About 8 o'clock this morning he returned to the house and shot himself. His body was found lying across that of his victim. He left a note in which he gave the cause for the murder as jealousy.

A Russian Quiet Worker.

SOFIA, Dec. 23.—In the trial of the cadets and officers of the Bulgarian army for conspiracy against the Regency, evidence has been adduced showing that the defendants were in communication with the Russian Consul.

The Snow Blockade in Germany.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The snow-storm has ceased. The railway blockade at Dresden and Leipsic continues. A postal service by sleds was started to-day between Chemnitz, Penig, Leipsic and other centres.

Germany Calling Her Soldiers Home.

BERNE, Dec. 23.—German students in Switzerland have been ordered to rejoin their regiments immediately. Many officers on furlough have been ordered to return to Germany.

Protestant Bishopric of Jerusalem.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The Kreuz Zeitung says England and Germany have dissolved the treaty relating to the Protestant Bishopric of Jerusalem. Probably the scheme long ago proposed to build a national church on the site for which donations have been collected throughout Germany will now be completed.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1886.

THE CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL.

Once more it is our privilege to greet our readers at this happy festival and to heartily wish them the compliments of the season. This holy and blessed Christmas-tide reminds us of the most eventful night in the world's history, when God came down to live with men in the likeness of humanity, and to redeem us by the sacrifice of Himself. On that night, ere the dawn came, angel-lips told the rejoicing shepherds the wondrous tidings, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." And so throughout the world, on Saturday, millions of human beings will unite in celebrating, some with holy thanksgiving and eucharists, others with mere festivities and worldly pleasures, the great Anniversary of the Nativity. "Such an occasion ever brings with it wholesome thoughts and pleasant practices.

The festival of Christmas teaches us that, after all the diversities of opinion now existing in the Christian world, there is deep down in many a heart a unity of purpose and a common aim which no external difference on minor points, can utterly extinguish. The world at large keeps Christmas-tide. Everywhere men are bidden to rejoice and be merry, to sing glad songs, and heartily assist in celebrating the Incarnation of the Son of Man, and with universal alacrity and widespread harmony, this command is punctually and earnestly obeyed. Well is it that it is so.

Christmas comes this year in the midst of the turmoil of a Provincial election. Its message is, therefore, abundantly needed. At such a time it frequently happens that hard feelings are engendered and party spirit is abroad, and bitterness and strife, or bigotry and prejudice, divide former friends and acquaintances. In the name of Him, who bestows Christmas blessings; in the name of that God-like charity and divine peace He came to bestow, let us keep this Christmas festival "in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace."

Let this holy festival and its lessons, bidding us give free play to the kindly emotions of the heart, work in us for good, and may all "bitterness and wrath, and clamour and evil speaking" be put away from us this holy Christmas-tide. Earnity ex.bitters the sweetest cup, and nothing is so helpful to a pleasant and merry Christmas as the thought that we have become reconciled to the offenders and that we forgive those who may have wronged or injured us in word or deed. In this spirit let us "Keep the Feast that Cometh."

But Christmas is the yearly reminder of charity in act as well as in word. It speaks of a divine gift and tells men that in order to raise themselves to the gods they must practice benevolence. Christmas is not only, or not simply, a season for merry-making and festivity, it is a time in which we should all put in practice the duty of alleviating the miseries and sorrows and aiding the distresses of the poor and needy. Widows and orphans do not always find Christmas bright and pleasant. And the needy and the poor can be found even in this land of plenty. And so we would say to our readers, let those in want be sought out and, if possible, relieved. Let us make the needy happy, if in our power, by giving them of our abundance, and let us, if we have nought else to bestow, readily offer them those gifts which are within the power of the very lowest in the social scale, viz., kindly sympathy, loving words, cheerful solace and consolation.

We hope the readers of the EXAMINER may enjoy to the full the delights of this holy season; that the old who look back on the past, may have their happy memories revived, and their recollections purified; that the young may be filled with joy and gladness, and that all may become higher in heart, purer in mind and stronger in faith—in one another as the years pass swiftly away. In these words, we heartily wish our ever-increasing circle of friends and patrons, A VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

It will take several editions of lying campaign sheets to make the working men of Peterborough believe that the Mowat government is hostile to labour interests. The Mowat government gave the best Factories Act in the world, to protect the health, morals and interests of the working men and their families. The Mowat government gave many of the working men the ballot they are to use Tuesday, and these working men will not be deluded by fibbing campaign sheets to mark that ballot against their best friend.

The Mowat Government does not spend one cent in assisted immigration. All the expenditure it makes is to settle immigrants on the free grant lands, who become consumers of the products of our manufactories and the wares of our merchants, or to prevent poor immigrants becoming a burden on our municipalities. A new country like Canada needs population and the more our wild lands are settled the greater the demands for the products of labour. The Mowat Government has settled 40,000 souls on free grant lands this and adjoining counties—40,000 consumers of the products of labour.

LIBERAL RULE.	CONSERVATIVE RULE
Ontario Government:	Dominion Government
Surplus of Assets over Liabilities.	Dominion National Debt.
$6,766,000	$261,000,000.
Ontario surplus over current expenditure for 1886.	Dominion deficit—beyond current expenditures for 1886 ?
$150,000.	$5,965,554.

One is the record of the Mowat Administration and the other of the Dominion Government, which is doing its best to supplant Mr. Mowat and place Mr. Meredith, the pliant tool of Sir John in charge of Ontario's surplus. Do the electors think it will pay to make the change? We do not think they entertain that opinion, and we are content to wait for their answer on Dec. 20th.

Proprietary Medicines.

A visit to Dr. Green's Laboratory, at Woodbury, N. J., has considerably changed our views, and especially our prejudices in regard to what are generally known as "Standard Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude Life itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experiences. Being a physician I had the curiosity to know how such a sale of two medical preparations could be sustained for so many years. The perfect system upon which the business is conducted, and the pharmaceutical arrangements for the manufacture of the two recipes with which we were made acquainted, are sufficiently convincing to us that the August Flower, for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints, and Boschee's German Syrup, for Throat and Lung Troubles, were for the complaints they are recommended, most excellent remedies, and only regret that in much of our practice, medical ethics prevent us from prescribing them without making the formulæ public. When we were shown the great quantity of voluntary letters having been forwarded Dr. Green, from all parts of the country, and from all classes of people, lawyers, ministers and doctors, giving a description of their ailments, testimonials of their cures, etc., I feel like endorsing Dr. Green's suggestion that the Government accept such valuable formulæ, and license them for general use by giving protection to the inventor same as patents generally.—Copied from N. Y. Druggists' Circular of Oct., 1886.

Do not Forget It.

It is a fact that Nerviline cannot be surpassed by any combination for the relief of pain. The reason is a good one. Nerviline contains the most powerful, and the latest discovered remedies. It is a magic pain cure. Rheumatism, stiff neck, cramps, neuralgia, colic, in fact all pain, internal, external, and local, are subdued in a minute. Go at once to any drug store and get a trial bottle. It will only cost you 10 cents, and you can at a small cost test the great pain cure, Polson's Nerviline. Large bottles only 25c. 6d51

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eodw41

Invisible but Instantaneous.

All pains or aches will be instantly removed by a few drops of Fluid Lightning applied over the affected parts. No time lost; no nauseous medicines needed; no poulticing or using greasy liniments. It will not blister or discolor the skin. Sold at 25c. per bottle by John McKee, druggist. Sufferers from Neuralgia assure us that they never fear it when their house contains a bottle of Fluid Lightning. eodw51

A Reasonable Hint.

For obstinate harrassing cough there is no better remedy than Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, which cures all throat bronchial and and lung diseases. It is pleasant to take and effectual for young or old. 2w51d

The History of Hundreds.

Mr. John Morrison, of St. Anns, N.S., was so seriously afflicted with a disease of the kidneys that dropsy was developing and his life was despaired of. Two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him after physicians had failed. 2w51d

Important News Item.

Cocketown.—Mrs. Campbell had been troubled for a number of years with Indigestion and Constipation, and was induced to try McGregor's Speedy Cure and found it all that was needed, and would recommend its use to any person similarly troubled. This invaluable remedy is sold in every part of Canada at 50c. and $1 per bottle. eodw51

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XXXII.

She locked the door of her bedchamber and threw off her walking dress; light as it was, she felt as if it weighed stills her. Even the ribbon round her neck was more than she could endure and undid it hastily. Her overburdened heart found no relief in tears. In the solitude of her room she thought of the future. The dreary foreboding of what it might be filled her with a superstitious dread from which she recoiled. One of the windows was open already; she threw up the other to get more air. In the cooler atmosphere her memory recovered itself; she recollected the newspaper that Herbert had taken from her. Instantly she rang for the maid. "Ask the first waiter you see downstairs for to-day's newspaper; any one will do, so long as I don't wait for it." The report of the divorce—she was in a frenzy of impatience now to read what he had read—the report of the divorce.

When her wish had been gratified, when she had read it from beginning to end, one vivid impression only was left on her mind. She could think of nothing but what the judge had said in speaking of Mrs. Linley.

A cruel reproof—and, worse than cruel, a public reproof—administered to the generous friend, the true wife, the devoted mother; and for what? For having been too ready to forgive the wretch who had taken her husband from her, and had repaid a hundred acts of kindness by unpardonable ingratitude.

She fell on her knees; she tried wildly to pray for inspiration that should tell her what to do. "Oh, God, how can I give that woman back the happiness of which I have robbed her?"

The composing influence of prayer on a troubled mind was something that she experienced now. An overpowering impatience to make the speedy and completest atonement possible to her. Must she wait till Herbert Linley no longer concealed that he was weary of her, and cast her off? No! It should be her own act that parted them, and that did it at once. She threw open the door and hurried half way down the stairs before she remembered the one terrible obstacle in her way—the divorce.

Slowly and sadly she submitted and went back to her room.

There was no disguising it; the two who had once been husband and wife were parted irrevocably—by the wife's own act. Let him repent ever so sincerely, let him be ever so ready to return, would the woman whose faith Herbert Linley had betrayed take him back? The divorce, the merciless divorce, answered No!

She paused, thinking of the marriage that was now a marriage no more. The toilet table was close to her; she looked absently at her haggard face in the glass. What a lost wretch she saw! The generous impulses which other women were free to feel were forbidden luxuries to her. She was ashamed of her wickedness; she was eager to sacrifice herself for the good of the once-dear friend whom she had wronged. Useless longings! Too late! too late!

She regretted it bitterly. Why?

Comparing Mrs. Linley's prospects with hers, was there anything to justify regret for the divorced wife? She had her sweet little child to make her happy; she had a fortune of her own to lift her above sordid cares; she was still handsome—still a woman to be admired. While she held her place in the world as high as ever what was the prospect before Sydney Westerfield? The miserable sinner would end as she had deserved to end. Absolutely dependent on a man who was at that moment perhaps lamenting the wife whom he had deserted and lost, how long would it be before she found herself an outcast, without a friend to help her—with a reputation hopelessly lost—face to face with the temptation to drown herself or poison herself, as other women had drowned themselves or poisoned themselves when the brightest future before them was rest in death?

If she had been a few years older Herbert Linley might never again have seen her a living creature. But she was too young to follow any train of repellant thought persistently to its end. The man she had guiltily (and yet how naturally) loved was lord and master in her heart—doubt him as she might. Even in his absence he pleaded with her to have some faith in him still.

She reviewed his language and his conduct toward her when she first disturbed that morning from her walk. He had been kind and considerate; he had listened to her little story of the ruin of her father, roused in the garret, as if her interests were his interests. There had been nothing to disappoint her, nothing to complain of, until she had rashly attempted to discover whether he was free to make her his wife. She had only herself to blame if he was cold and distant when she had alluded to that delicate subject on the day when he first knew that the divorce had been granted and his child had been taken from him. And yet he might have found a kinder way of reproving a sensitive woman than looking into the street, as if he had forgotten her in the interest of watching the strangers passing by. Perhaps he was not thinking of the strangers; perhaps his mind was dwelling fondly and regretfully on his wife?

Instinctively she felt that her thoughts were beating her back again to a state of doubt from which her youthful hopefulness recoiled. Was there nothing she could find to do which would offer some other subject to occupy her mind than herself and her future?

Looking absently round the room she noticed the packet of her father's letters placed on the table by her bedside.

The first three letters that she examined, after untying the packet, were briefly written, and were signed by names unknown to her. They all related to race-horses, and to cunningly devised bets which were certain to make the fortunes of the clever gamblers on the turf who laid them. Absolute indifference on the part of the winners to the ruin of the losers, who were not in the secret, was the one feeling in common which her father's correspondents presented. In mercy to his memory she threw the letters into the empty fireplace and destroyed them by burning.

The next letter which she picked out from the little heap was of some length, and was written in a clear and steady hand. By comparison with the blotted scrawls which she had just burned, it looked like the letter of a gentleman. She turned to the signature. The strange surname struck her: it was "Bennydeck."

Not a common name, and not a name which seemed to be altogether unfamiliar to her. Had she heard it in connection with some great bomb in the early days of her married existence? There were no recollections which it stirred that she could now call to mind.

She read the letter. It addressed her father familiarly as "My dear Roderick," and it proceeded in these words:

"The delay in the sailing of your ship offers me an opportunity of writing to you again. My last letter told you of my father's death. I was then quite unprepared for an event which has happened since that affliction befell me. Prepare yourself to be surprised. Our old wrecked house at Smallpenhill, in which we have spent so many happy half days when we were schoolfellows, is sold.

"You will be almost as sorry as I was to hear this; and you will be quite as surprised as I was when I tell you that Sandymal Place has become a priory of English nuns of the order of St. Benedict.

"I think I see you look up from my letter with your big, blunt eyes staring straight before you, and say and swear that this must be one of my mystifications. Unfortunately (for I am fond of the old home in which I was born) it is only too true. The instructions in my father's will, under which Sandymal has been sold, are peremptory. They are the result of a promise made many years since to his wife.

"You and I were both very young when my poor mother died; but I think you must remember that she, like the rest of her family, was a Roman catholic.

"Having reminded you of this, I may next tell you that Sandymal Place was my mother's property. It formed part of her marriage portion, and it was settled on my father if she died before him, and if she left no female child to survive her. I am her only child. My father was therefore dealing with his own property when he ordered the house to be sold. He will left the purchase money to me. I would rather have kept the house.

"But why did my mother make him promise to sell the place at his death?

"A letter attached to my father's will answers this question and tells a very sad story. In deference to my mother's wishes it was kept strictly a secret from me while my father lived.

"There was a younger sister of my mother's who was the beauty of the family—loved and admired by everybody who was acquainted with her. It is needless to make this long letter longer by dwelling on the girl's miserable story. You have heard it of other girls, over and over again. She loved and trusted; she was deceived and deserted. Alone and friendless in a foreign country—her fair fame blemished, her hope in the future utterly destroyed—she attempted to drown herself. This happened in France. The best of good women—a sister of charity—happened to be near enough to the river to rescue her. She was sheltered; she was pitied; she was encouraged to return to her family. The poor, deserted creature absolutely refused; she could never forget that she had disgraced them. The good sister of charity won her confidence. A retreat, which would hide her from the world and devote her to religion for the rest of her days, was the one end to her wasted life that she longed for. That end was attained in a priory of Benedictine nuns established in France. There she found protection and peace—there she passed the remaining years of her life among devoted sister friends, and there she died a quiet and even a happy death.

Lakehurst.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. J. R. Stratton our Liberal candidate, visited the town hall of this place Thursday Dec. 9th, and in the address, which he delivered to a large and influential audience composed of the electors of Lakehurst, he advanced arguments which tended to remove in a great degree the prejudices that had been roused by Mr. Carnegie's address of a short time before. We wish Mr. Stratton every success in his electioneering campaign and our ballots will show our sincerity.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-less trusses made in New York State, costing me $16. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KANE.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sure; and 95 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. Fourth Line Meeting.

The Liberal Candidate Carries the Meeting—A Charge Made and Disposed of.

A rousing campaign meeting was held at the Temperance hall, Fourth Line, Smith, last night in Mr. Stratton's interest. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Stratton, Cox and Bertram upon the leading political issues, and they also dealt with the clap trap cries raised by the opponents of the Ontario Government. Mr. Flavelle, town, was present, and charged Mr. Stratton with preventing Mr. Cavanagh being dealt with for a third offence under the Scott Act. Mr. Stratton gave Mr. Flavelle all the time he wanted to make, or attempt to make, good his charges. Mr. Peel, who had been acting in accord with Mr. Flavelle in this matter, retired from the meeting before this point in the discussion had been reached. Mr. Stratton denied point blank that he had interfered, as had been charged, either with the inspector or the County Attorney to obstruct the course of the law. Mr. E. B. Wood, County Crown Attorney, was present and also Mr. Gen. Cochrane, inspector, and both denied emphatically that Mr. Stratton had tried to influence them either in the case in question or in any other case, to prevent the enforcement of the act. The meeting was in thorough sympathy with Mr. Stratton and had the effect of refuting the insidiously circulated falsehoods, designed to injure his interests. The attempt made at this meeting to injure him had the effect of benefitting him to a large degree. The staunch yeomen of the 4th Line are too fair-minded to go back on their principles at the bidding of men who pose as ultra moralists, with the sole object of scoring political points in favor of the Conservative candidate. The Fourth Line will do its duty on election day.

After the formation of committees and other business had been transacted, the President read a communication from Mrs. Rutherford, of Kingston, urging the necessity of immediate steps being taken to procure the instruction of temperance in the schools of our town. The question shall be brought before the School Board at an early date. An encouraging communication from an "Absent Friend" was also received. Committees which were appointed will meet at Miss Sanderson's store next Monday evening, at half-past seven o'clock.

The Christmas Stocking.

Merry Christmas is coming, and coming right quick. The children are dreaming all night of St. Nick and sending him letters he only can read by way of the chimney postoffice with speed. On mamma's lap the tots sit so still as a mouse, hearing, "Night before Christmas, when all through the house," and when they can't keep the old sandman away they travel in dreamland in Kriss Kringle's sleigh. The old folks, delighted and feeling as young as when they their own little red stockings hung, are plotting and planning and hiding with care queer bundles that come in from everywhere. And stockings, the biggest that mamma can find, are quickly got ready and evenly centipoed to each joyous darling who'll see them. We know, stuffed full of the treasures St. Nick will bestow. The pantries are loaded with home-made mince pies, and fruit cakes and jellies for feasts that we prize. And all through the house is a sparkle, and glow which tells merry Christmas is near with its cheer. Hurrah! Merry Christmas will quickly be here. Already the sleigh and its tiny reindeer with Santa Claus shouting and making them fly is coming on snow clouds silent in the sky.

They Laughed.

The Review of the 22nd makes a serious charge against Police Magistrate Dumble. While the nomination speeches were being made, Mr. Bertram met Mr. Dumble on the street and told him that he had just come from the Court House—that Mr. Stratton was speaking; that he had spoken three hours and a half, and there was no sign of his stopping; that Messrs. Carnegie and Toker were sitting—staring—bursting with anger—while James R. was bowling along in fine style. The scene was rich. Carnegie with his thumb in a marked place in the scrap book, waiting his turn and no turn in sight. Mr. Dumble said it was too funny for anything and he laughed—he laughed again. He said it would make a horse laugh. And then Dumble and he laughed together, and some naughty eavesdropper with long ears told the Review and the Review could not stand it, so it called Mr. Dumble a "dishonest Police Magistrate." Poor Carnegie! Poor Toker! After all one feels a little sorry for them.

Mr. Kendry's "Solemn Declaration."

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner:

DEAR SIR,—All respectable electors must observe with deep regret the unmanly and cowardly weapons which Mr. Kendry has introduced into political warfare. Have politics descended so deep in the mire that men even of the most shadowing reputation, will seek to distort and betray private conversations which before honorable men are held sacred? It is a mean, a contemptible way, a despicable state of morality when men will openly vaunt that they are unworthy of trust, unworthy of credit, unworthy of confidence, and that they would sell for a bit of silver the most private and sacred confidences. With what grace comes a "solemn declaration" from a man like Mr. Kendry, the paid servant of Mr. Carnegie's company? With what credibility comes a "solemn declaration" from a man of Mr. Kendry's ilk, dependant for his wages and his livelihood upon the smile and encouraging glances of so vindictive an employer! With what charming effrontery comes a "solemn declaration" from a man who does not consider his mere word, as opposed to another's, of the faintest worth or of the flimsiest credit especially when that "solemn declaration" is so cunningly drawn and so astutely worded that no indictment for perjury or false swearing would lie! It shows that with all his wretched bravado and all his boasted veracity Mr. Kendry knows himself too well to believe himself and knows the public so thoroughly that he does not expect his word or his oath unsupported to be worth consideration and moreover that he is not such a huge fool as not to have a loophole out of which in the direst extremity he could conveniently crawl.

It is, I am told, a well-known rule of law, that in every affidavit and every declaration made by two or more deponents, the names of the several persons making the same shall be inscribed in the jurat, except, that if the affidavit or declaration of all the deponents is taken at one time by the same officer, it shall be sufficient to state that it was sworn or declared by both of the "above named" deponents, and if such rule is not followed the affidavit or declaration is considered a nullity and worthless, and for which no offence could be charged, even if the statements therein were most wilfully false.

It seems incredible that under such a petty trick and subterfuge Mr. Kendry should seek to hide his diminished head, and should strive to test how far the magnanimity of a gentleman can be strained. And even were the statements as true and as straight as the golden rule, neither the most common instincts of a gentleman, nor the higher principles of a man, nor the lower nature of a scoundrel, would dare before his fellow men distort a private conversation among quandom friends, and boast of his betrayal, and glory in his shame.

Party spirit in Peterborough has run high many a time, but never has it reached so low an ebb. It is hoped that never again will any man for base political purposes sully his honor and soil his name in order to give an unfair and wretched advantage over an honest opponent. He who would betray one trust, would betray two or more.

It speaks well for the honor of the bar in Peterborough that when Mr. Kendry requested one of them to prepare his solemn declaration the latter refused saying that he did not believe the statements and that another of the bar, upon the same night, refused to have anything to do with such work.

Did Mr. Bertram but for one moment even think himself called upon to put on record his base denial of Mr. Kendry's "solemn declaration," I can only say that he does not gauge the feelings of his fellow countrymen, that he does not measure fairly the sense of respect and honor which the electors of West Peterborough feel for him, and that he is unaware of public opinion as to Mr. Kendry's credibility.

Yours truly,
CONSERVATIVE.

Important Scott Act Decision.

Duty of the Dominion Government to Enforce the Scott Act.

OTTAWA, Dec. 23.—The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Prince Edward Island, has ordered the discharge of a party convicted of violating the Scott Act, on the ground that the Stipendiary Magistrate who tried the case had no jurisdiction, as he was appointed by the Provincial and not by the Dominion Government. This is in effect a declaration that the Scott Act, being a Dominion revenue act, must be enforced by Dominion officers. A writ of prohibition has been served upon the Stipendiary Magistrate at Charlottetown, restraining him from hearing Scott Act cases.

Chief Justice Palmer's decision goes much farther than Mr. Mowat's statement that Provincial Governments have nothing to do with the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act.

(From a Correspondent.)

The many friends of Mr. H. A. Strike will be pleased to learn of his marked success while attending the Normal School at Toronto. Owing to the high percentages taken by him during the term and at the final examination, he obtained for himself an honourable mentioning, also a professional certificate, "Grade A." We are especially pleased to learn that Mr. Strike, on his final teaching, obtained the highest number of marks awarded. The people of Frazerville are very fortunate in securing his services for next year.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is accepted by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns, from the tender aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painless corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, does not go feeling around a man's foot, but goes to business at once, and effects a cure. Don't be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Get "Putnam's," and no other. 6d51

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 20c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 20 per cent higher.

UNEASY KNIGHTS.

OPPOSITION TO POWDERLY SAID TO BE STEADILY GROWING.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—The dissatisfaction of the Knights of Labor and the alleged unconstitutional action of the General Assembly at Richmond is increasing. Mr. Powderly's salary is $2000, creating an office for Charles H. Litchman at $2000, reducing Frederick Turner's salary to $2000, adding two members to the General Executive Board at $4 a day and expenses, and increasing the term of office to two years, is widespread and increasing. Besides, the unfortunate ending of the big strike of butchers in Chicago, the letter of Mr. Powderly denouncing the Chicago Anarchists and forbidding District Assemblies 24 and 57 from paying over any money that they had collected for the defence of the Anarchists, have added to the discontent, and the last assessment of twenty-five cents ordered by the General Executive Board, in the face of the fact that the expenses in the item of salaries alone have been well-nigh doubled, has started a movement which will in all probability lead to a special session of the General Assembly. Several district assemblies have already refused absolutely to pay the last assessment, on the ground that it is illegal and unnecessary, and many more separate local assemblies in various parts of the country have done the same.

It is necessary under the laws of the order for five district assemblies in no many different States to demand a special session, and then the General Master Workman is bound to call it. District Assembly No. 24 of Chicago, to which the Anarchist circular is addressed, has taken the initiative in the matter and will in all probability prefer charges against the General Master Workman before the General Executive Board for exceeding his authority in issuing the order in regard to the Anarchists and in ordering the Chicago butchers back to work. This body has determined to sign a call for a special session of the General Assembly to be held soon. There is little doubt that the necessary five states can be secured. At least one district assembly in New York will sign the call and there are districts in Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana and Michigan which are anxious to have the matter settled as to whether the Knights of Labor are a constitutional body or whether they are entirely in the hands of the Executive Board. Should there be a special session called there is little doubt that there will be a serious split in the order. Many of the most influential men in it, even in District Assembly 49, are disgusted with the way things are going. One of them said yesterday: "Powderly has acted like a fool in this matter of the Anarchists. It is not a matter of sympathy with them, it is a matter of whether they shall have fair play." The official organ of District Assembly No. 24, which Powderly rebukes for raising funds for the defence of the Anarchists, a paper called the Knights of Labor, is particularly bitter in denouncing Mr. Powderly, and it is supported in its utterances by many knights of influence here.

A MOTHER'S TERRIBLE CRIME.

The Christmas Eve Experience of a New York Entry Clerk.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.—Chas. Marston of 218 East One Hundred and Nineteenth-street returned home last evening to an appalling bereavement, rendered doubly so by the Christmastide festivities of his neighbors. He found his wife dead, by her own act, and his babe, a girl 24 months old, dead with her. He had left his wife in the morning apparently happy and contented. Their Christmas preparations were nearly completed, having occupied their minds for several days. Mr. Marston is an entry clerk in a down-town store. He arrived home last evening shortly after 6 o'clock. His son by his first wife, Frank, a boy of 14, was waiting at the street door of the flat. He had come from his work earlier, but had not been able to get into the family rooms on the third floor. Father and son supposed that Mrs. Marston was out with her baby. But they at last tired of waiting outside, and Mr. Marston sent the boy up the fire escape. The door was opened in this way and Mr. Marston went up toward the front room. The way led through a bedroom, and when the door of it was opened a volume of gas rushed out. This was the first hint that anything was wrong. Mr Marston ran into the front room and struck a match. The light disclosed the bodies of mother and babe in the bed, as though for a night's rest. The doors, windows and ventilators were closed, and the single gas jet turned on had quickly filled the little room to a suffocating degree. The bodies were yet warm, and medical aid was quickly at hand, but nothing could be done.

Before taking her life Mrs. Marston had set her house in order. A new bonnet that she had just trimmed was hung upon the clock in the front room and over it a piece of crape was draped. Another piece of mourning stuff was tied about the neck of the dead woman. Stuck in the frame of a looking-glass in the kitchen was a note in German written on the back of an envelope. It read:

"DEAR PAPA: Be so kind and let me sleep. I am so tired. Buy Frankie a new suit for his Christmas. Forgive me, dear Charley.

"Your loving wife, Augusta."

Mr. Marston is about 30 years old and a man of domestic habits. He said that he and his wife had lived very happily together. His story of the discovery of the tragedy was told with an evident effort at self-control that only the strongest exercise of will could make successful.

GEN. LOGAN DEAD

THE SOLDIER AND STATESMAN PASSES AWAY IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—John A Logan died at three minutes before three o'clock this afternoon. His death, which came with a startling suddenness to his family and friends, had not been unexpected by his physicians for some days. The lurking tendency to brain complication which had been present in a greater or less degree and constantly increasing in severity during his entire illness had prepared them to expect the worst. The racking pains which he suffered during the early days of his illness yielded to treatment, but left him in a weak and exhausted condition, from which he never rallied, and upon which the fever preyed with increasing violence until the hour of his death. After noon to-day no one ventured to express a hope that the sufferer would last during the day. Intimate friends gathered with the grief-stricken and almost frantic relatives about the bedside, while in the spacious hall and parlors below a sad-faced throng remained in hushed expectancy. The stifled sobs of the wife and children and the inarticulate utterances of the dying man, as shortly after 2 o'clock he regained sufficient consciousness to recognize his wife, were audible at times throughout the mansion. At 2.55 Dr. Baxter came out of the sick room and said to one who was waiting for intelligence: "Simply say he is dying." Then the voice of prayer at the bedside rose above the sobs of the stricken mourners, and with its end ended the life of the warrior statesman.

"The scene," said Dr. Baxter, "was one of the saddest I have ever witnessed. All present were deeply affected. The grief of Mrs. Logan and her children was pitiful in the extreme."

It is stated that the General's body will no doubt be taken to Illinois for burial, but no definite arrangement for the funeral will be made until Mrs. Logan, who is wholly prostrated, can be consulted. Gen. Logan's system was very sensitive to weather changes of a particular kind, and he has often been heard to remark in a half jocular way that he believed he could accurately foretell the coming of a snowstorm. The seeds of disorder were sown during the war, his first attack of rheumatism having followed immediately the ending of a twenty-hour bout's march through a blinding snow-storm. His last attack, too, resulted from brief exposure to the snow-storm of a fortnight ago, and his death preceded by but a few minutes the beginning of a heavy flurry which, though brief, covered the earth with a thick carpet of white.

JIM CUMMINGS CAPTURED.

Chicago Detectives Said to Have Secured the Express Robber.

CHICAGO, Dec. 26.—Jim Cummings, the Adams Express robber, who entered an express car on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway and stole $50,000 two months ago tonight, was captured in this city yesterday, together with two of his pals and his mistress. The Chicago Pinkerton agency made the arrest, under the direction of Robt. Pinkerton of New York, who has been in Chicago, St. Louis and other western cities for the past two weeks looking after the thieves in the interest of the Adams Express Company. On the person of Cummings $2300 in cash was found, which is presumed to be what he had left of the $50,000 haul. The names of Cummings' "pals" have not been made public. Last night the three men were handcuffed together and taken to St. Louis by six Pinkerton detectives, headed by Charlie Wappenstein, the Cincinnati agent of Pinkerton.

Early in November Robert Pinkerton took the case and his men had traced the thief all over Missouri and Kansas, and in his investigations Pinkerton made the discovery that Cummings had been keeping company with a woman in St. Louis. She was handsome and Cummings had been infatuated with her, but after the robbery he was careful to remain away from her for a time. She was kept under a close watch, however, and for a month no progress was made. At the end of that time Robert Pinkerton was informed by one of his operatives that the woman was preparing to come to Chicago. This aroused the suspicions of the cunning detective, and not only was she accompanied here by one of his men, but Mr. Pinkerton also followed close in her wake. Charlie Wappenstein was put to work and Cummings' lady friend being located on the West Side, could not make a move without being shadowed. About three weeks ago the expectations of Mr. Pinkerton were realized when Cummings joined his lady friend and began his carousal. Cummings seemed to suspect that something was wrong, and was afraid of daylight. He seldom left his house until after dark. When he did so, he was never lost sight of by the detectives, who did not want to arrest him until they ensnared his partners. They "let him play his string out," until they had the accomplices in their clutch. Yesterday afternoon they went to the woman's house and found Cummings with her. He and the woman were taken quickly to the Pinkerton establishment on Fifth-avenue, and whether or not he made a statement is not known. W. A. Pinkerton, Chief of the Chicago Bureau, refused to talk about the case to-night. But he admitted that Jim Cummings had been captured, and that he is now in safe keeping.

Said to be a Fabrication.

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—Two local papers published this morning accounts of the arrest here yesterday of Jim Cummings, who has long been believed to be the perpetrator of the St. Louis and San Francisco express robbery, and two of his accomplices. According to the accounts referred to, the men were arrested in a house of questionable repute and upwards of $20,000 was captured with them. The men are said to have been shadowed for some time on account of their lavish display of money. The Inter-Ocean will say to-morrow that these accounts have no foundation.

GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

BERLIN, Dec. 25.—Advices from Vienna say it is reported there that a serious difference exists between the cabinets of Vienna and Berlin. It is claimed that Prince Bismarck is serving Russian designs without regard to the interests of Austria. Mery Von Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, it is stated, will soon hold a conference with Count Kalnoky, and will insist that the situation be cleared up and that Bismarck be asked to declare whether Germany is an ally of Russia or of Austria-Hungary.

Cut Her Children's Throats.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 26.—Charles Burger, a farmer living ten miles south of Bushville, returned home from town on Christmas evening and found his wife and three children dead in the house. His wife had been subject to temporary fits of insanity, and it is supposed that while out of her head she killed the three children and then cut her own throat with a razor.

Killed by a Fellow Workman.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Dec. 26.—Mike Hadderman, a leader at the Connellsville Coke and Iron Company's works, shot and killed a fellow employe named John Gibson at an early hour this morning. The men had been drinking together, quarreled over the great strike of last spring, and Hadderman, drawing his revolver, fired four shots into Gibson's body, killing him almost instantly. Hadderman has been arrested and claims the killing was in self-defence.

A Bullet for a Stone.

ALTOONA, Pa., Dec. 26.—At Gallitzin to-day a man named Gregg was shot and killed by a brewer named Aukenbauer. Gregg was intoxicated and threw a stone through Aukenbauer's bar-room window, whereupon the latter seized a gun and shot him, death resulting soon after.

TO-MORROW'S BATTLE.

To-morrow closes the contest for the West Riding of Peterborough. The final struggle of the campaign that has been carried on with so much energy the past month or so, culminates to-morrow in the decisive struggle at the polls. The time for talk is past and the time for work has come. The orator's occupation is gone now the marshalling of the Liberals at the polls, is the work at the hour, and it should be the special work of every Liberal to see that every vote is polled. As is well known, the law forbids the hiring of teams to convey voters to the polls; it is therefore incumbent on every Liberal to volunteer whatever horses and equipages he may have at his command. To-morrow is the harvest of the seed sown during the past month, and if the most energetic and well organized efforts to gather it in, are not made, the work of the campaign will be largely lost. The people have been thoroughly instructed from the platform and through the press as to their duty at this time, and it now remains to see that that duty is done. Let every Liberal remember that, no matter how well disposed he may be to the success of Liberalism, it is all in vain unless he marks his ballot for the Liberal candidate. The prospects of success for our cause are excellent. The indications are that a solid Liberal vote will be supplemented by a large number of persons whose party predilections are not so strong as to prevent them voting for economy and honest government. Hundreds of Conservatives do not desire to see the Mowat Government defeated, and they will not take a course having that end in view. There are only two things that can defeat the Liberal candidate to-morrow. One is over-confidence even to apathy among our friends, and the other is the employment of "substantial arguments," by the enemy. Hard, continuous and unremitting work till to-morrow night at 5 o'clock will eliminate the first, and the keenest vigilance will largely neutralize the other. On the part of Liberals "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether," and he West Riding of Peterborough is redeemed.

Masonic Sermon.

Delivered in Ashburnham by the Rev. Bro. W. C. Bradshaw, Rector of St. Luke's.

On Sunday the members of the Masonic fraternity of Peterborough attended divine service at St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, and listened to the annual sermon delivered by the Rector, Rev. Bro. W. C. Bradshaw. At 2.30 p.m. a large number of Masons—almost filling the commodious rooms—assembled in the Masonic Hall. The brethren, clothed as Masons, went in procession to St. Luke's church and took their places in the first eight or ten seats of the middle row. The church, which had been beautifully decorated for the Christmas season, was well filled with worshippers. The hymns sung were specially appropriate to the occasion, and the singing was in charge of Mr. L. Seward, organist of St. John's, who presided at the organ. The lessons were also strikingly appropriate, the first being from the Book of Chronicles, describing the building of Solomon's temple. The preacher took his text from the Gospel of St. Matthew, and delivered one of the most exhaustive and instructive Masonic sermons ever given in this vicinity, and any attempt at summary would only be a mutilation of its beauty of diction and completeness of argument.

On the return of the brethren to the Masonic Hall, Wor. Bro. Beaudrette Worshipful Master of Peterborough Lodge, called the craft from refreshment to labour, when the following resolution was submitted to the Lodge:—

Resolved:—That this Lodge tender its most hearty thanks to Rev. Bro. W. C. Bradshaw, for the very able and interesting sermon delivered to the brethren this afternoon, and that the Secretary be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Bro. Bradshaw as early as possible.

After some very appropriate remarks by the Master, the resolution was carried unanimously, when the Lodge was closed and the brethren dispersed to their homes.

Electors, on Tuesday, place your mark on the Ballot opposite the names of Stratton and Blezard.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the quickest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up the cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a perfectly healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the disease manifests itself, as it will, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price [illegible] w51f

AN EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE.

A Young Girl Forced to Marry a Man Whom She Had Refused.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Dec. 23.—The following particulars of a most extraordinary occurrence have just been received: A young girl named Taylor, 15 years of age, living near Gaysen Sulphur Springs, Grayson County, was engaged to marry an Englishman named Redd, stopping at the springs. The time was fixed for the marriage and all preparations made, when the girl changed her mind and refused to marry him. The Englishman applied to Squires Alley and Trent for a warrant to arrest the girl. They issued it, and the girl was brought before them to answer the charges preferred. Whatever they were, Redd insisted that the marriage take place then. She refused to comply, but the justices insisted that she must keep her promise or go to prison. The frightened girl then consented and the ceremony was quickly performed. There is no doubt whatever of the correctness of the above statement, and the excitement exists in the neighborhood since the facts leaked out.

Prince of Toboggans.

From the Montreal Witness.

WITH a view to helping our readers in their choices, we appointed our most enthusiastic toboggoner a "Committee of Enquiry" to obtain information on the subject, trusting to the fact that he made his own toboggans for an impartial description of the various styles. He reports as follows: Leaving aside the infinite variety in the toboggans of those who make their own, there are six different styles on the market, the prices varying according to the quality of the wood and the amount of labor required. The retail prices are:

"Lariviere," any size up to 7 or 7½ feet, $1.50.

"Paton," only size, 6½ feet; birch, $7.50; oak, $8.50.

"Hillcard," "A" quality, 4½ feet, $1.25; 5½ feet, 75; 6½ feet, $2.50; 7½ feet, $3.50. "B," or second quality, $1 less throughout.

"Comet," 5 feet, low rail, $2.25; high rail, $2.50; 6 feet, low rail, $2; high rail, $2.50; 7 feet, low rail, $2.25; high, $2.75.

"Star," 5½ feet, $2.50; 6 feet, $2.75; 6½ feet, $3.25; 7 feet, $3.75.

The Indian toboggans run from $1 to $2.50, but vary so much according to the quality of the wood that no fixed prices can be got.

The number of feet is in every case the length from the first crossbar.

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

"I can well now understand how my mother's grateful remembrance associated her with the interests of more than one community of nuns; and you will not need to be told what she had in mind when she obtained my father's promise at the time of her last illness.

"He at once proposed to bequeath the house as a free gift to the Benedictines. My mother thanked him and refused. She was thinking of me. 'If our son fails to inherit the house from his father,' she said, 'it is only right that he should have the value of the house in money. Let it be sold.'

"So here I am—rich already—with this additional sum of money in my banker's care.

"My idea is to invest it in the funds, and to let it thrive at interest until I grow older and retire, perhaps, from service in the navy. The later years of my life may well be devoted to the founding of a charitable institution, which I myself can establish and direct. If I die first—oh, there is a chance of it! We may have a naval war, perhaps, or I may turn out one of those incorrigible madmen who risk their lives in arctic exploration. In case of the worst, therefore, I shall leave the interests of my contemplated home in your honest and capable hands. For the present good-by and a prosperous voyage outward-bound."

So the letter ended.

Sydney dwelt with reluctant attention on the latter half of it. The story of the unhappy favorite of the family had its own melancholy and sinister interest for her. She felt the foreboding that it might, in some of its circumstances, be her story too—without the peaceful end. Into what community of merciful women could she be received in her sorest need? What religious consolations would encourage her penitence? What prayers, what hopes, would reconcile her, on her deathbed, to the common doom?

She sighed as she folded up Capt. Bunnydeck's letter and put it in her bosom to be read again. "If my lot had fallen among good people," she thought, perhaps I might have belonged to the church which took care of that poor girl."

Her mind was still pursuing its own sad course of inquiry. She was wondering in what part of England Sandyseal might be. She was asking herself if the nuns at the old moated house ever opened their doors to women whose one claim on their common Christianity was the claim to be pitied, when she heard Linley's footsteps approaching her door.

His tone was kind, his manner was gentle. His tender interest in her seemed to have revived. Her long absence had alarmed him. He feared she might be ill. "I was only thinking," she said. He smiled and sat down by her, and asked if she had been thinking of the place they should go to when they left London.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

The one hotel at Sandyseal was full from the topmost story to the ground floor, and by far the larger half of the landlord's guests were invalids sent to him by the doctors.

To persons of excitable temperament in search of amusement the place offered no attractions. Situated at the innermost end of a dull little bay, Sandyseal—so far as any view of the shipping in the channel was concerned—might have been built on a remote island in the Pacific ocean. Vessels of any importance kept well out of the way of treacherous shoals and currents lurking at the entrance of the bay. The anchorage ground was good, but the depth of water was limited to small vessels only—so shabby old fishing smacks which seldom paid their expenses, and to dirty little coasters carrying coals and potatoes. At the back of the hotel two slovenly rows of cottages took their crooked course inland. Sailing masters of yachts, off duty, sat and yawned at the windows; lazy fishermen looked wearily at the weather over their garden gates, and superfluous coast guards gathered together in a wooden observatory and leveled useless telescopes at an empty sea. The flat, open country, with its few dwarf trees and its scraggy hedges, lay prostrate under the sky in all the desolation of solitary space, and left the famous restorative air free to build up dilapidated nerves, without an object to hinder its passage at any point of the compass. The lonely, drab-colored road that led to the nearest town offered to visitors taking airings a view of a low, brown object in the distance, said to be the convent in which the nuns lived, secluded from mortal eyes. At one side of the hotel the windows looked on a little wooden pier sadly in want of repair. On the other side a walled inclosure accommodated yachts of light tonnage, stripped of their rigging, and sitting solitary on a bank of mud until their owners wanted them. In this neighborhood there was a small outlying colony of shops; one that sold fruits and fish; one that dealt in groceries and tobacco; one shut up, with a bill in the window inviting a tenant, and one, behind the methodist chapel, answering the double purpose of a postoffice and a storehouse for ropes and coals. Beyond these objects there was nothing (and this was the great charm of the place) to distract the attention of invalids, following the doctors' directions, and from morning to night taking care of their health.

The time was evening; the scene was one of the private sitting-rooms in the hotel, and the purpose in view was a little tea party.

Rich Mrs. Romsey, connected with commerce as wife of the chief partner in the firm of Romsey & Renshaw, was staying at the hotel in the interests of her three children. They were of delicate constitution; their complete recovery, after severe illness which had passed from one to the other, was less speedy than had been anticipated, and the doctor had declared that the nervous system was, in each case, more or less in need of repair. To arrive at this conclusion, and to recommend a visit to Sandyseal, were events which followed each other (medically speaking) as a matter of course.

The health of the children had greatly improved; the famous air had agreed with them, and the discovery of new playfellows had agreed with them. They had made acquaintance with Lady Myrie's well-bred boys, and with Mrs. Ormond's charming little Kitty. The most cordial good feeling had established itself among the mothers. Owing a return for hospitalities received from Lady Myrie and Mrs. Ormond, Mrs. Romsey had invited the two ladies to drink tea with her, in honor of an interesting domestic event. Her husband, absent on the continent for some time past on business connected with his firm, had returned to England, and had that evening joined his wife and children at Sandyseal.

Lady Myrie had arrived and Mr. Romsey had been introduced to her. Mrs. Ormond, expected to follow, was represented by a conspicuous blank of absence. She was not well that evening, and she begged to be excused.

"I see it is a great disappointment," Mrs. Romsey said to her husband. "You would have been charmed with Mrs. Ormond—highly-bred, accomplished, a perfect lady. And she leaves us to-morrow. The departure will be an early one, and I shall find an opportunity, my dear, of introducing you to my friend and her sweet little Kitty."

Mr. Romsey looked interested for a moment when he first heard Mrs. Ormond's name. After that he slowly stirred his tea and seemed to be thinking instead of listening to his wife.

"Have you made the lady's acquaintance here?" he inquired.

"Yes—and I hope I have made a friend for life." Mrs. Romsey said with enthusiasm.

"And so do I," Lady Myrie added.

Mr. Romsey went on with his inquiries.

"Is she a handsome woman?"

Both the ladies answered the question together. Lady Myrie described Mrs. Ormond as "one detestable word—an 'elegant.'" By comparison with this Mrs. Romsey's reply was intelligible. "Not even illness can spoil her beauty!"

"The sort of headache she has got to-night?" Mr. Romsey satirically suggested.

"Don't be ill-natured, dear! Mrs. Ormond is here by the advice of one of the first physicians in London; she has suffered under serious troubles, poor thing."

Mr. Romsey persisted in being satirical. "Connected with her husband?" he asked.

Lady Myrie entered a protest. She was a widow; and it was notorious among her friends that the death of her husband had been the happiest event in her married life. But she understood her duty to herself as a respectable woman. "I think, Mr. Romsey, you might have spared that cruel allusion," she said with dignity.

Mr. Romsey apologized. He had his reasons for wishing to know something more about Mrs. Ormond; he proposed to withdraw his last remark, and to put his inquiries under another form. Might he ask his wife if anybody had seen Mr. Ormond?

"No."

"Or heard of him?"

Mrs. Romsey answered in the negative once more, and added a question on her own account. What did all this mean?

"It means," Lady Myrie interposed, "what we poor women are all exposed to—scandal." She had not yet forgiven Mr. Romsey's allusion, and she looked at him pointedly as she spoke. There are some impenetrable men on whom looks produce no impression. Mr. Romsey was one of them. He turned to his wife and said, quietly: "What I mean is, that I know more of Mrs. Ormond than you do. I have heard of her—never mind how or where. She is a lady who has been celebrated in the newspapers. Don't be alarmed. She is no less a person than the divorced MRS. LINLEY."

The two ladies looked at each other in blank dismay. Restrained by a sense of conjugal duty, Mrs. Romsey only indulged in an exclamation. Lady Myrie, independent of restraint, expressed her opinion, and said: "Quite impossible!"

"The Mrs. Ormond whom I mean," Mr. Romsey went on, "has, as I have been told, a mother living. The old lady has been twice married. Her name is Mrs. Presty."

This settled the question. Mrs. Presty was established, in her own proper person, with her daughter and grandchild at the hotel. Lady Myrie yielded to the force of evidence; she lifted her hands in horror: "This is too dreadful!"

Devices of Advertisers.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes becomes shy of the tempting paragraph, fearing the advice that is concealed in it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be a cure for a disease at once loathesome to friends, and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer. 6dw52

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in New York State, costing me $40. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

New Year's Reception.

The reception given to the young men by the Young Men's Christian Association, and their lady friends has been so greatly successful in former years, that it will be repeated this season. Every young man in the town and neighborhood may consider that he is personally invited. Everything possible is being done in order to make the reception the best yet given.

A Creditable Record.

The many friends of Miss M. M. Davidson will be pleased to learn of her marked success while attending the Normal School at Ottawa. Owing to the high percentages taken by her during the term and at the final examination, she obtained for herself honorable mentioning, being promoted to "Grade A." Miss Davidson on her final teaching obtained the highest number of marks awarded. She now holds a professional certificate, "Grade A," thus entitling her to hold the highest position in our public schools. The young lady is to be congratulated on her well-merited success.

"Under the Gaslight."

The largest house which has greeted the Woodward Dramatic Company since their coming to Peterborough was the one which assembled on Saturday night to be delighted with "Under the Gaslight." The play was splendidly put on, far surpassing any previous production of the same play ever made in Peterborough. Miss Eugenie Lindeman, as the persecuted Laura Courtland, deservedly won the admiration of the entire audience. Mr. Geo. Woodward as Byke the cool designing villain was immense. The scenery used in the play was grand, and specially realistic was the train crossing the stage under full steam. It is unnecessary to particularise the other characters of the cast, all did splendidly and the entire play gave the greatest satisfaction to the large audience. To-night the great Drama entitled "British Born," will be presented, when there should be a crowded house, if the people wish to see a stirring play, well put on and capitally acted. Tickets, 10c., 20c., and 30c.

The "Toll-Gate" School.

Miss E. Becket, who has been for some time past teaching in the "Toll-gate" school house, North Monaghan, was on Thursday, at the close of the term, made the recipient of a very pleasant surprise. She was greeted with the following address and presented with the handsome articles therein mentioned:—

DEAR MISS BECKET,—As we are about to separate for our Christmas vacation, we desire to express our gratitude to you for the kind interest you have taken in us during the past year. As a small token of our affection, we ask your acceptance of this pencil case and album. We wish you "A Pleasant Xmas" and "A Happy New Year."

Signed on behalf the school,

EVELYN SARGINSON,
NELLIE EASTLAND,
HARRY CARVER.

Miss Becket is to be congratulated upon the great success she has met with in this school. The above incident furnishes flattering evidence of the manner in which her work is appreciated, and still further evidence of the satisfaction she has given is afforded by the fact that she has been re-engaged for another term at an increased salary.

Honouring a Pastor.

A Complete Surprise for Rev. Alex Bell—The Ladies of St. Andrew's Church.

8 o'clock Thursday evening the occupants of St. Andrew's manse in this town were greatly surprised on answering a ring at the door-bell to find a company of nearly 30 ladies of the congregation dropping in and declaring that they had come to take possession. After depositing their baskets and parcels in a convenient place amid the silent wonder of the household they took seats and after a few preliminaries asked for Rev. Mr. Bell. On appearing the rev. gentleman was conducted to a particular chair, and Mrs. Carnegie read the following address, the presentation of the handsome silk gown and escock being made by Mrs. C. Nicholls:—

To the Rev. Alex. Bell, Minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Peterboro'.

REV. AND DEAR SIR:

On behalf of the ladies of your congregation we beg to herewith present you with this pulpit gown, as a slight recognition of the faithfulness with which you have, ever since your advent amongst us—now more than 9 years ago—preached unto your hearers the precious truths alone to be found in the bible; and the earnestness with which you have ever laboured to bring those entrusted to your spiritual care to Jesus.

We earnestly trust that He who rules all things may be pleased to long spare you to wear the accompanying gown, and to go out and in amongst us, breaking unto us, and those who are so dear to us, the bread of life, and that when our great Master calls you hence, you may prove to have been a Reaper who needeth not to be ashamed, and whose garner is well filled with sheaves, not a few of which have been gathered in St. Andrew's Church, Peterborough.

In conclusion we would avail ourselves of this opportunity to wish Mrs. Bell and family, as well as yourself, the compliments of the season, and many, many, happy returns of the same.

Signed on behalf of the ladies,

MRS. CARNEGIE,
MRS. NICHOLLS.

Mr. Bell, who was completely taken by surprise, replied to the following effect:—

MY ESTEEMED LADY FRIENDS,—You have taken me completely by surprise. I never dreamed of such kindness and I had no expectation of its coming. Your gift, however, is no less pleasing, no less valuable to me that it was unexpected, and I accept it cheerfully at your hands, and for it, with all the sincerity and earnestness of my heart, I thank you and all who had a share in procuring it.

I fear it is only the greatness of your good will that makes you speak so favorably of my labors among you. It is your indulgence that judges me, and my faults and shortcomings are not remembered. When I became your minister I promised to preach the gospel faithfully and fearlessly to all, and next to the approval of my own conscience I value your testimony, so kindly given, as it tells me that I have in some degree, at least, succeeded.

I trust that while I wear such a handsome token of your favor, it shall ever remind me of what you expect and stimulate me to greater faithfulness; that running and striving and working together in the good will of the Gospel, we may grow in grace together, and at last rise to shine together in the possession of a share of the inheritance reserved for the righteous.

I cannot trust myself to say more than that I reciprocate for you and yours the good wishes expressed for Mrs. Bell and our children, and hope that the good feeling of which your presence now gives ample evidence, may never fail between us.

Again I thank you for your handsome gift. The remainder of the evening was spent in conversation and the enjoyment of the good things provided.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE IN GERMANY.

Railway Service Restored—Snow Three Feet Deep in Silesia.

BERLIN, Dec. 25.—Although the railway service was restored yesterday morning, traffic is still seriously blocked, especially in connection with Christmas deliveries. However, the snow-storm was a God-send to the unemployed. Thousands of men are employed in clearing the streets of Berlin, and for this work they receive 3½ marks per day. Advices from Saxony and Silesia say much work was suspended during the snow-storm. In the mines of Silesia the men were compelled to stop work. In Nuremburg the snow is three feet deep. A number of trains were snowed up, and passengers suffered great privation.

THE PEACE OF EUROPE.

Its Maintenance Dependent Upon the Czar, Who is a Drunkard.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—The Vienna correspondent of the Times says that Austrian statesmen declare that the maintenance of peace is entirely dependent upon the action of the Czar, and, as he drinks, delirium tremens may at any moment cause him to commit an act of folly which would precipitate a war. Austria must be ready for such a contingency.

The Pester Lloyd says that the Czar's fear of the Nihilists is excessive, and that he is suspicious of everybody with whom he comes in contact, including even his own wife and children.

Heavy Law Costs.

The costs in the Campbell divorce case amount to $175,000, and the Argyle family will have to subsist on oatmeal in the future. They rue the day when Colin married a beauty. He might better have been rubbing his back against one of the ancestral scratching posts, although he need not do that if he wore quinn's underwear.

Hartington in Rome.

ROME, Dec. 25.—Lord Hartington, accompanied by Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, a member of Lord Salisbury's former Ministry, attended Christmas services at St. Peter's and Santa Maria Maggiore Cathedrals, Rome. Lord Hartington will go to Monte Carlo on Monday. He will not reach London until January 10.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

Our space has been in such demand that some communications on municipal matters have been held over for three or four days. We give a considerable instalment in this issue, and commend them to the perusal of the ratepayers, as matters worthy of, at least, careful reading. In these matters every aspect of a question should be considered, as an aid to forming a mature and proper judgment.

The Nicholl's Hospital and Things in General.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner.

I intend this to be my last letter to the ratepayers before the coming elections. If their minds are not already made up as to the choice of councillors for the coming year it is hardly likely that anything further that I can say will effect a change. If the people do not feel that interest in the business of the town which they ought to do, no one else can do it for them. And if they prefer to let things go on as they have done for the years now gone by, and continue to pay their taxes, whether rightfully or wrongfully imposed, if they continue to vote for the same men, not caring whether a change is needed or not, but just vote for the candidates because they ask them to do so, then they have no right to complain if things have not gone on as they wished. And it is likely that this will be the case with very many of those whom I have address. Just think of it. The taxes for this year of fifty-seven thousand dollars, and the ratepayers, both rich and poor, have got to pay the last cent. What in all this money wanted for, and where does it all go? The property of the people has been assessed by the present assessors very largely in excess of former years, and very largely in excess of what it ought to be, when the rate of taxation was from ten to twelve mills in the dollar. Now, however, with an average increase in the assessment of thirty per cent, the rate of taxation is 15½ mills in the dollar. Again I ask, where does all this money go? Just think of a small town like ours raising and spending fifty-seven thousand dollars in one year. If the rate of assessment had been this year what it was last year, or the year before, to raise this fifty-seven thousand dollars would have required a rate of twenty mills on the dollar. The ratepayers must take this whole matter into their own hands, and they must demand the appointment of new assessors for the coming year; assessors who know their duty and will perform it honestly. And the ratepayers must put new men into the council, in the place of those who have neglected or abused their trust; and all the candidates must be pledged to CARRY OUT THE WISHES OF THE PEOPLE.

AMOUNT TO THE ENORMOUS SUM

But the electors must bear in mind that the future pledges of unworthy councillors will be of very little use. Where such exist, new councillors must be put in their places, but pledged also to do right. Our streets have cost us this year, I am told, over eleven thousand dollars. I should have thought that six thousand dollars would have been sufficient. What do the taxpayers think about it? It is for them to say. In electing a council for the coming year, the electors should make it a point to insist upon the abolition of the Nicholls hospital; should make it a point to see to it that no further bonus or exemption is given to the Auburn mills; should see to it that the expenses of the town are reduced down to not more than forty thousand dollars, and that salaries be reduced, and the most rigid economy is practiced everywhere. They have now the opportunity to secure these things. But will they do so? I doubt it. Before closing this letter I would like to give the ratepayers the "Dr." and "Cr." side of the probable expense of keeping up the Nicholls hospital another year. This will show them how little they need expect to have any reduction of expenses for next year. The probability is that the figures of some of the items will be increased.

By amount received from Mrs. Nicholls' endowment	200

Between against the same, to be met by the taxes for 1887

Any of the ratepayers can form their estimate from the above figures what position the three will be in at the close of 1887, provided they and others will be the same. Those of them which they will have to pay next fall if they allow this hospital to continue in operation another year. They are the parties most interested and it is for them to say and to do. If they want to avoid these taxes there is only one way for them to act, to elect a Council who will get parliament to repeal the act incorporating the said hospital, and to put the management of this hospital on the same footing again as Mrs. Nicholls'. There is no other way for them to do it. The whole matter rests upon getting the right kind of a Council. And to do this duty the people must direct all their energies.

If the ratepayers want to be safe against the granting of any further bonus to the Auburn Mills they should keep Mr. Kendry out of the Council. He is the paid servant of those mills and his employers expect him to serve their interests before those of the town. And of course he will do so. Putting Mr. Kendry back into the council again would be like the people of a besieged city, in time of war, placing the enemy in possession of the gates on a promise that they should keep out their own soldiers.

I have now finished my unpleasant task. I suppose I shall lose some friends by the course which I have pursued in reference to this business, as well as other matters, and if I have I shall regret it. I felt that I had a duty to perform and, as I generally do in all things which I undertake, I have performed it to the best of my ability, and without a desire to offend any one. Before I finally close I would like to say that the liberal conduct of Mrs. Nicholls in donating such a valuable property to the town, deserves great praise and gratitude. And she must not feel annoyed at the people for declining her generous offer. They are not able to keep it.

RATEPAYER.

Appeal to Ratepayers.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Ratepayers, what would the shareholders of any company say to the directors of said company who, at the end of each year, would say, "We have distributed a few thousands of your loose cash among our poor friends; you are not to know who are the recipients, as some of them are sensitive folk." How long would such conduct be tolerated by said shareholders? Your council are treating you in like manner, and I have an idea that if the list of charity receivers was published, your eyes would stick out of their sockets at beholding an array of names of people living on your Ward coverings, who are too lazy to work and who are the farthest from being real objects of charity.

The ratepayers want nothing done in the dark. The reason why many are so much ashamed to let their neighbors know they are receiving help from the town is because they know that many of the poor, paying for this help, are needing it more than them. Away with such mock modesty, real poverty is no disgrace. The ratepayers are only too willing to help the needy, but they want to know whether these are helped indeed. It is a matter of thousands of dollars yearly to the ratepayers of this town. They demand, and reasonably, too, to know where their money goes. Select your men, ratepayers; now is your time. Vote for men who will do things above board.

TAXPAYER.

Not Very Laughable.

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—Terrance Clark died in terrible agony at the hospital last night from the effects of having drank a glass of ammonia. Clark was out carousing on Christmas night, and his companions gave him ammonia to drink as a joke. Five arrests have been made.

To Cure a Corn.

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. It is a simple matter to remove corns without a pain, for if you will go to any druggist or medicine dealer and buy a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, and apply it as directed the thing is done. Get Putnam's and no other. 6dw52

R. W. MONCASTER.

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Mrs. Romsey took a more compassionate view of the disclosure. "Perhaps the poor lady is to be pitied," she gently suggested.

Lady Myrle looked at her friend in astonishment. "My dear, you must have forgotten what the judge said about her. Surely you read the report of the case in the newspapers?"

"No; I heard of the trial, and that's all. What did the judge say?"

"Say?" Lady Myrle repeated. "What did he not say! His lordship declared that he had a great mind not to grant the divorce at all. He spoke of this dreadful woman who has deceived us in the severest terms; he said she had behaved in a most improper manner. She had encouraged the abominable governess, and, if her husband had yielded to temptation, it was her fault. And more besides that I don't remember."

Mr. Romsey's wife appealed to him in despair. "What am I to do?" she asked, helplessly.

"Do nothing," was the wise reply. "Didn't you say she was going away to-morrow?"

"That's the worst of it!" Mrs. Romsey declared. "Her little girl Kitty gives a farewell dinner to-morrow to our children, and I've promised to take them to say good-by."

Lady Myrle pronounced sentence without hesitation. "Of course your girls mustn't go. Daughters! Think of their reputation when they grow up!"

"Are you in the same scrape with my wife?" Mr. Romsey asked.

Lady Myrle corrected his language. "I have been deceived in the same way," she said. "Though my children are boys (which perhaps makes a difference) I feel it my duty as a mother not to let them get into bad company. I do nothing myself in an underhand way. No grooms! I shall send a note and tell Mrs. Ormond why she doesn't see my boys to-morrow."

"Surely that's a little hard on her?" said merciful Mrs. Romsey.

Mr. Romsey agreed with his wife, on grounds of expediency. "Never make a row if you can help it," was the peaceable principle to which this gentleman committed himself. "Send word that the children have caught colds, and get over it in that way."

Mrs. Romsey looked gratefully at her admirable husband. "Just the thing!" she said, with an air of relief.

Lady Myrle's contempt expressed itself with the strictest adherence to the laws of courtesy. She rose, smiled, and said "Good-night."

Almost at the moment innocent little Kitty astonished her mother and her grandmother by appearing before them in her nightgown after she had been put to bed nearly two hours since.

"What will this child do next?" Mrs. Presty exclaimed.

Kitty told the truth. "I can't go to sleep, grandma."

"Why not, my darling?" her mother asked.

"I'm so excited, mamma."

"About what, Kitty?"

"About my dinner party to-morrow. Oh," said the child, clasping her hands earnestly as she thought of her playfellows, "I do so hope it will go off well!"

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Belonging to the older generation which has lived to see the age of hurry, and has no sympathy with it, Mrs. Presty entered the sitting-room at the hotel two hours before the time that had been fixed for leaving Sandyseal with her mind at ease on the subject of her luggage. "My boxes are locked, strapped, and labeled; I hate being hurried. What's that year reading?" she asked, discovering a book on her daughter's lap and a hasty action on her daughter's part which looked like trying to hide it.

Mrs. Ormond made the most common and, where the object is to baffle curiosity, the most useless of prevaricating replies. When her mother asked her what she was reading she answered "Nothing."

"Nothing!" Mrs. Presty repeated with an ironical assumption of interest. "The book of all others, Catherine, that I most want to see." She snatched up the book, opened it at the first page, and discovered an inscription in faded ink which roused her indignation: "To dear Catherine, from Herbert, on the anniversary of our marriage." What unintended mockery in those words, read by the later light of the divorce! "Well, this is mean," said Mrs. Presty. "Keeping that wretch's present after the public exposure which he has forced on you. Oh, Catherine!"

Catherine was not quite so patient with her mother as usual. "Keeping my best remembrance of the happy time of my life," she answered.

"Misplaced sentiment," Mrs. Presty declared. "But I must make allowances for you; your mind is giving way, my dear, under the influence of this miserable place."

Catherine asserted her own opinion against her mother's opinion for the second time. "I have recovered my health at Sandyseal," she said. "I like the place, and I am sorry to leave it."

"Give me the shop windows, the streets, the life, the racket, and the smoke of London," cried Mrs. Presty. "Thank heaven, these rooms are let over our heads, and out we must go, whether we like it or not."

This expression of gratitude was followed by a knock at the door, and by a voice outside asking leave to come in, which was, beyond all doubt, the voice of Randal Linley.

With Catherine's book still in her possession Mrs. Presty opened the table-drawer, threw it in, and closed the drawer with a bang. Discovering the two ladies, Randal stopped in the doorway and stared at them in astonishment.

"Didn't you expect to see us?" Mrs. Presty inquired.

"I heard you were here from our friend Sarrazin," Randal said; "but I expected to see Capt. Mennydeck. Have I mistaken the number? Surely these are his rooms?"

Catherine attempted to explain. "They were Capt. Mennydeck's rooms," she began; "but he was so kind, although we are perfect strangers to him——"

Mrs. Presty interrupted. "My dear Catherine, you have not had my advantage; you have not been taught to make a complete statement in two words. Permit me to seize the points (in the late Mr. Presty's style), and to put them in the strongest light. This place, Randal, is always full; and we didn't write long enough beforehand to secure rooms. Capt. Mennydeck, hearing, to his great delight, that we were going, wanted to give us some of his rooms, as a lady in delicate health. This explains (I am told up-stairs) how we were mistaken for the right people, and that is all about an intensely stupid joke. Good-by, and worthy of Sir Charles Grandison himself. When I went down-stairs to thank him he was gone—and here we have been for nearly three weeks, sometimes seeing the captain's yacht, but, to our great surprise, never seeing the captain himself."

"There's nothing to be surprised at, Mrs. Presty. Capt. Mennydeck likes doing kind things, and hates being thanked for it. I expected him to meet me here to-day."

Catherine went to the window. "He is coming to meet you," she said. "There is his yacht in the bay."

"And in a dead calm," Randal added, joining her. "The vessel will not get here before I am obliged to go away again."

Catherine looked at him timidly. "Do I drive you away?" she asked, in tones that faltered a little.

Randal wondered what she could possibly be thinking of, and acknowledged it in so many words.

"She is thinking of the divorce," Mrs. Presty explained. "You have heard of it, of course, and perhaps you take your brother's part?"

"I do nothing of the sort, ma'am. My brother has been in the wrong from the first to last." He turned to Catherine. "I will stay with you as long as I can with the greatest pleasure," he said, earnestly and kindly. "The truth is, I am on my way to visit some friends; and if Capt. Mennydeck had got here in time to see me I must have gone away to the junction to catch the next train westward, just as I am going now. I had only two words to say to my friend, about a person in whom he is interested—and I can say them in this way." He wrote in pencil on one of his visiting cards, and laid it on the table. "I shall be back in London in a week," he resumed, "and you will tell me at what address I can find you. In the meanwhile, I miss Kitty. Where is she?"

Kitty was sent for. She entered the room looking unusually quiet and subdued, but, discovering Randal, became herself again in a moment and jumped on his knee.

"Oh, Uncle Randal, I'm so glad to see you!" She checked herself, and looked at her mother. "May I call him Uncle Randal?" she asked. "Or has he changed his name, too?"

Mrs. Presty shook a warning fore finger at her grand-daughter, and reminded Kitty that she had been told not to talk about names. Randal saw the child's look of bewilderment and felt for her. "She may talk as she pleases to me," he said, "but not to strangers. She understands that, I am sure."

Kitty laid her cheek fondly against her uncle's cheek. "Everything is changed," she whispered. "We travel about; papa has left us, and Syd has left us, and we have got a new name. We are Ormond now. I wish I was grown up, and understood it."

Randal tried to reconcile her to her own happy ignorance. "You have got your dear good mother," he said, "and you have got me, and you have got your toys——"

"And some nice boys and girls to play with," cried Kitty, eagerly following the new suggestion. "They are all coming here directly to dine with me. You will stay and have dinner too, won't you?"

Randal promised to dine with Kitty when they met in London. Before he left the room he pointed to his card on the table. "Let the captain see my message," he said, as he went out.

Devices of Advertisers.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes becomes shy of the teasing paragraph, fearing the advice that is concealed in it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be a cure for a disease at once loathsome to friends, and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer. 6dw52

Poor Tony.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eodw41

The History of Hundreds.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.

Gentlemen,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring trusses made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, Capt. H. Rose.

Monday being the anniversary of St. John the evangelist, the Masonic lodges of this town met at the Masonic Hall. There was a large attendance of the members, and the interest of the occasion was heightened by the presence of Dist.-Dept. G. M. R. McCaw, and Dist.-Dept. G. Sec. A. L. Randell, of Cobourg.

The principal business of the evening was the installation of the elective and appointed officers of both lodges. The installation ceremonies were conducted by V. W. Bro. R. H. D. Hall; W. Bro. R. P. Boucher; W. Bro. Jas. Alexander; W. Bro. H. C. Winch and W. Bro. B. Sherly. The following officers were duly installed for the ensuing year:

PRESENTATION.

"One of the most pleasing events of the evening was the presentation of a Past Master's jewel to W. Bro. H. C. Winch. The presentation was made by R. W. Bro. Rev. V. Clementi, on behalf of the brethren of Corinthian Lodge. The R. W. Bro. spoke in complimentary terms of the progress made in Masonry by Bro. Winch, and of the usefulness and assistance he had been to the craft. Bro. Winch was much affected and returned thanks in a few brief but appropriate remarks. The jewel was suitably inscribed, and was an elegant piece of gold.

At the close of the proceedings the brethren adjourned to the ante-room, where refreshments were partaken of. The evening closed in an interesting manner, and will be remembered as one of the most successful anniversaries ever held by the Masons of Peterborough.

St. Andrew's Church Choir Make a Presentation—Another Happy Affair.

Last evening a party of ladies and gentlemen (Messrs. D. D. Galletly, Miss Galletly, Miss Babcock, Mrs. Best, Miss Armstrong, Mr. Stewart, Miss Sherlock, and the Misses White,) called at the residence of Mrs. Johnston, Water Street, and soon made their mission known by the presentation of an address to Miss Hattie Johnston. The following address was read by Mr. Galletly:—

Miss Hattie Johnston:—

DEAR FRIEND,—I have been appointed by the St. Andrew's Church choir to present you in their name with this Silver Cake Basket. You have been associated with St. Andrew's Church as organist for one year, short though the time has been to form acquaintanceships, yet, by your social and obliging disposition you have endeared yourself to every member of the choir. Also your excellent talents as an organist have been appreciated not only by the choir but by the whole congregation, and here I cannot help referring to the long connection (musically) you and I have had. I do not think you will consider it presumptuous in my laying claim to your musical fatherhood, and as such I can assure all of my musical friends assembled here that I am proud of my musical daughter. Accept then of this present as a token of our esteem and regard for you, and as you are about entering into a matrimonial alliance, and with your partner leaving here to take up your abode in the far west, we trust that you may be long spared to each other, that a useful and happy life is before you, and that your talents may ever remain consecrated to improving and aiding the songs of Zion. In conclusion may we all be enabled, through Christ, to do well our part here below, so that we all may meet in the sweet bye and bye above, there to join in the New Song, for ever and ever, is the earnest prayer of your old associates in praise, viz., the members of the St. Andrew's Church choir.

The address was signed by those present as mentioned above.

Miss Armstrong made the presentation. Though taken entirely by surprise, Miss Johnston gave expression to a few words of drop thanks to her warm friends for the gift and kind remembrance, stating that she had done nothing to deserve such a hearty recognition. Their friendship would ever be remembered and cherished.

Municipal Matters.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—The excitement of political demonstrations having died away, and as the election is close at hand, the public mind is so much taken up that the importance of our municipal election is almost lost sight of, if it were not for a few who by a deep undercurrent, work their way quietly to a realization of their pet schemes, with an object not for the best men in filling the position of a Town Council, such as a place like Peterborough demands, but to fill it with such as do the bidding of a clique for the furtherance of their temperance crusade. If such a course is adopted, and as we have had the workings of the Council for many years, it will drift from that to worse. Not wishing to condemn all who have and are sitting at the Council Board, but the good ones have been so much in the minority as to be easily defeated by the unscrupulous, hence the failure to obtain a good Board. The rule by which I measure men (and such rule holds good without failing) is, not by the influence of individual exertion as used by Ratepayers to pledged to do their bidding, nor men who pay a trifle of almost nothing in the shape of taxes, nor men who have always been a failure in their own business, and those who pretend to exercise their time for the good of the town, and such men who with a flourish use every occasion offered to show up Peterborough to the Ratepayers as the most flourishing town, thanks to their wisdom and management.

Ratepayers, cast one glance back into the past and you find that more men have filled our Council Board who have been a failure in their own business, and, will you expect of such to conduct your affairs successfully. On such candidates when offering themselves has my suspicions been aroused and such should be censured, but these have always triumphed over better men, and why? because such were engaged as hirelings for others to do their bidding. Have we not the same going on quietly again, whereby a busy party tries, regardless of all the better qualifications for a good Council and, with only one sole object before them, the realization of their scheme, to pitchfork men into the Council who will do their bidding, who want to grab and rob the ratepayers of their money so as to get funds for their work of espionage. It will rest with the Ratepayers whether Peterborough should have such a Council or not, and as the taxes have increased this year considerably, (having myself paid a sum of $300.00 in taxes this year), the ratepayers will find necessary. Let it be understood that I am as much a temperance man as those who make more show or boast than I do, and I abhor drunkenness, my principles are such to resist any tyrannical arbitrary enactments. I have without restraint by good example raised a large family in temperance principles and never found liquor, kept always unlocked, take wings. Being a person of observation let an example suffice to demonstrate that forcible means will always find force to resist, which otherwise would be far different. Had God not commanded and brought Adam and Eve's attention to a particular tree from which fruit they should not eat, the question is that they might never have touched the same. The same rule holds good to the present day and many a zealous temperance man, who by his own folly prohibits instead of allowing and stigmatizing the abuse of liquor, would not have cause to regret that members of his own family had gone astray. I do not intend to enlarge more than necessary but the one point to which reference is made so often that drunkenness is the mother of crime, is not correct and I will substitute that and when our Creator commanded that men should earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, His aim was not, as Moses will have it, for our punishment, but for a blessing and a provision for our comfort and health, but this also is looked on by many opponents as arbitrary and to the detriment of any community and Peterborough is no exception. There are lots of drones as in a beehive who ought to be killed as bees do. I do not mean literally so, but as Scripture says, the one who wont work shall not eat. Charitableness is laudable in its place, for the infirm and helpless, but to support others who refuse to help themselves by work means paying a premium for laziness. I have found it difficult often to get some one to scrub a floor, and of men to do a days work, when often are calls made for support. Our Mayor, Mr. Stevenson, has expended a good deal in wood for charitable purposes when lots of wood is allowed to rot away almost inside the corporation. Should this be so? There has been much paid out indiscriminately for charity by the Council when work for the whole year has been plentiful.

Thanking you Mr. Editor, I remain
Yours, truly,
WM. LECH.

Terrors of the Future.
From the Omaha World.

Barber—"Yes, this boycotting is a great thing; it never did any good to barbers though, because our union was not founded on the right plan; but it's the strongest union on the globe now." Customer—"Oh, well, I'm not interested in that; get through some time to-day, I'm in a hurry, and—" "Yes, as I was saying, all we have to do is to put out an order, 'Don't shave that man,' and he's done for all over the United States—couldn't get a hair off if his beard reached the ground; have a shampoo?" "No—I mean yes, but hurry." "You need some hair restorer, too; I'll just do you up a dozen bottles." "But—" "And we have the finest hair oil in the market; you will take a dozen of that, I suppose." "See here, does that union you spoke of extend over Europe, too?" "Clear to the North Pole." "I'll take a keg."

A Put-Up Job.
From the Texas Siftings.

A young lady living in Houston, Tex., applied for a position in the public school, but was unable to pass the examination. "I was so sorry to hear that you failed to pass your examination," said a friend. "Yes; so was I." "How did it happen?" "O, they just asked me lots of things I didn't know. What do you suppose they asked me?" "I've no idea." "The Examining Board asked me all about Socrates, Confucius, St. Peter and a whole lot of gentlemen I never met in my life. I had never been introduced to any of them. Why didn't they ask me something about Andy Faulkner or Dan McGary, or some of the members of the Texas Legislature? I could have talked by the hour about them. It was a put-up job, that's what it was."

Prohibition in Texas.
From the Texas Siftings.

In some Texas cities the inhabitants are obliged to rely on cisterns for drinking water. A house in Houston being to rent, a gentleman who desired to obtain it asked the proprietor, who was none other than Dan McGary, of the Houston Axe: "What sort of drinking water have you got?" "The best in the world—cistern water," replied Dan. "But does the water in the cistern never run dry?" "It never did but once, and that was before there was a beer saloon in the neighborhood. Now there are three places where you can get beer, and, of course, there is no danger of the water in the cistern not holding out."

Probability Quite.

"Papa," said a little girl, "a male bird can't lay an egg, can't it, papa?"

"Yes, my child."

"A white duck's kick with its two front feet, does it, papa?"

"No, my child."

"Then, do you know why the mule kicks with its behind feet?"

"No, I do not," replied the father; "but I guess it is because it can't kick as well with its fore feet?"

"I think that is so, too, but if the mule could talk back, as mama does to you, he

My toast is far more cheery

To that sweet girl, so sage,
Who takes off her hat,
So polite and pat

Her bare head gives to mine.

My pitiful plight, if I drink at all right,

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 20c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 30 per cent higher.

RUMORS OF WAR.

THE FRENCH PRESS ALARMED AT GERMANY'S PREPARATIONS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—A despatch to the Herald from Paris says rumors of impending war still overhang France.

Yesterday the Soleil, the mouthpiece of the Orleans princes, asked the following questions. "Is it true that a German army is already concentrating on the French frontier? Is it true that 150,000 troops are already in Alsace-Lorraine, with provisions and ammunition for 50,000 more? Is it true that the peasants of the Rhenish provinces have been notified of an early requisition of all their horses? Is it true that all the station-masters in Alsace-Lorraine have been ordered to make preparations for the transportation of an enormous amount of war material? Is it true that Germany in a few days will be able to concentrate in front of Nancy 250,000 men? Is it true that the plan of the German staff is to surprise us before we are able to mobilize our forces, and thus dislocate our armies by a sudden attack on our frontier?"

The Republican National says: "Let Germany make her preparations; that is her role: but to accuse us of wishing to bring about war, of seeking to quarrel with the Germans, is un peu trop effronte. Germans should leave such knavish tricks to England. Nevertheless, if we want peace, because peace is necessary for us and for Europe, that is no reason for Germany to try and frighten us by her threats. The day that France is attacked France will fight with the supreme energy of a nation that refuses to perish. The struggle will be fearful, the results will be terrible for the conqueror as well as the conquered. Let those in whose hands peace or war rests think twice before running such tremendous risks."

The Conservative Republican Journal des Debats says: "It is childish to deny that the rumors of war are firmly believed in, but France knows that an offensive war against Germany would be an act of pure madness, and all the recent measures of our diplomacy clearly prove that to maintain the peace of Europe should be our chief occupation.

"Von Moltke and his fellow-workers know that military laws are not made for the morrow only. In preparing their army bill and in defending it in the Reichstag it is their duty to look far ahead, and place the military situation in the most favorable aspect. The calculations of the German staff are based upon the supposition of a powerless or neutral Austria, a hostile France, and a Russia allied with France. It would be foolish of us to complain of Von Moltke and the German military authorities for formulating a simple hypothesis to which nothing in the actual state of Europe lends probability."

Paul de Cassagnac, in L'Autorite, says: "There is no need to be a pessimist to face the events that threaten us in the coming spring. Our Minister of War has terrible faults, but nobody doubts his ardent patriotism. Now is the moment for us to close up our ranks in the face of the danger that threatens us."

M. Raue, a stalwart Republican and Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, says: "All accusations that France is preparing for offensive war are utterly false. All her efforts are concentrated upon a purely defensive organization for our fatherland. There is not a single Frenchman who wants war, for we all know that the first cannon fired would be the signal for a fight for our very existence as a nation. We are all convinced of this. The meanest peasant feels that a people can never undergo a second time disasters like those of 1870 without being wiped out of the map and without ceasing to have any national existence. With this creed firmly implanted in the breasts of all Frenchmen, it is surely not from us that will come the policy of venture and hazard that would let loose all over Europe the terrific tempest. France will not provoke Germany nor offer any pretext for provocation, but if attacked she will sacrifice her last man and her last franc and fight as long as the last drop of her blood remains in her veins."

A WOMAN IN THE CASE.

How the Secret Work of the K. of L. was Exposed at New Amsterdam.

AMSTERDAM, N.Y., Dec. 28.—The result of an investigation into the expose of the secret work of the Knights of Labor conducted by the local executive resulting in charging the traitorous act to Henrietta G. Frank of this city. The general verdict of the working people laid the charge at her door some time ago. The Knights assert that no evil will befall Miss Frank through the instrumentality of the order. But that some great calamity will overtake her is the opinion of many prominent leaders. A statement from Miss Frank was obtained by the World correspondent to-night. Documents indorsed by proper official members of the Knights of Labor are held by her as receipts received on the return of the secret work several months ago. The affidavit of the publisher of the boycotted sheet which first printed the expose, it is said, was done to retard investigation and shield Henrietta Frank from the obscure cast by those who knew the high position she once held in the order and her reasons for withdrawing. Her course as an officer in the order was unsatisfactory and persuasion was used successfully to induce her to retire from the position. Threats said to emanate from her are public property and much indignation is expressed at her proceedings. Miss Frank is a tall, masculine appearing female. She holds a responsible position in one of the city mills. She seemed to be thoroughly conversant with the details of a plot to drive her from the community. She seemed surprised that the affidavit of the publisher and her own protests of innocence were insufficient to exonerate her from any shadow of doubt about the origin of the expose. She called upon the press to do justice to the ex-Knights.

A MINISTERIAL FRAUD.

Rev. Mr. Peach of Glen Falls, N.Y., Asked to Step Out.

GLEN FALLS, N.Y., Dec. 28.—Rev. Mr. Peach of Pawlett, just over the line from Washington County, preached his farewell sermon to his congregation Sunday at their request. About three years ago the church was thrown into a volcano of excitement by the announcement that Rev. Mr. Peach had gone into the house of one of the prominent church members and made an indecent proposal to the daughter, her parents being absent. The affair nearly broke up the church, but as the minister was about to be married to an estimable young lady the matter was hushed up.

Some of the congregation did not believe in Mr. Peach and determined to keep his movements under strict surveillance. Their waiting was at last rewarded. Some time ago Rev. Peach left Pawlett with the ostensible object of visiting New York. Soon afterward a Pawlett woman was missing, and it was believed that she had joined the clergyman. She and Peach lived together for some time in Troy, when they returned to Pawlett. The pair were confronted with point blank accusations and the parson at once said that he would step down and out, which he did. His wife is an esteemed lady and much sympathy is expressed for her. The whereabouts of the parson are at present unknown.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1886.

A GRATIFYING VICTORY.

The contest in the West Riding is over and the result is a gratifying victory. Mr. Stratton, the Liberal candidate has been returned, as the figures published elsewhere show, by a not very large but sufficiently decisive majority. In every way the result is a subject for cordial congratulation to Liberals. After being continuously in the possession of the Conservative party for about ten years the, West Riding was decided in favor of Liberal principles, as exemplified in the honestly conducted government of the province. The factors assisting to bring about this change were various. In the first place the splendid record of the Mowat Administration, their admirable management of Provincial affairs, their sturdy, patriotic and successful attitude in maintaining the constitutional and territorial rights of Ontario, and their eminent fitness for wisely, economically and successfully conducting our affairs, no doubt, had a very large influence in deciding the result. There were also very many Conservatives who, having the good of the country more than mere party success at heart, gave their support to the candidate of an administration which they did not desire to see replaced by an incompetent collection of political incapables. Some of these were life-long Conservatives, who have become wearied with the shifting, unreliable policy of their party, which, in this Riding at least, has learned the lesson, that reckless disregard of solemn promises and ungrateful disregard of faithful services, are more than men of spirit will stand. No doubt the personal popularity of the Liberal candidate was not without considerable effect on those whose Political sympathies were not of a pronounced character. The enfranchisement of a very large number of young men was an important factor also in deciding the election; they would naturally rally round a candidate of their own class, and to the fact that they did rally round Mr. Stratton and work for him with an energy, will and intelligence worthy of veteran politicians, is to be largely ascribed the success of the Liberal cause, and it will not be out of place here to acknowledge the invaluable assistance rendered by the young men in this contest. The victory has not been won without a mighty effort. The Liberal candidate has worked with energy, industry and persistence, and prominent Liberals have stood by him throughout the campaign and done yeoman service in the splendid redemption of the riding of West Peterborough, which we are enjoying. In the moment of success we have not one harsh or unkind word to say of our opponents. They also made a hard fight, but in their most energetic efforts they were handicapped by the badness of the cause they sought to promote. The victory that has been won over them in this riding is all the greater when the unscrupulous means used to elect the Conservative candidate are considered. The most flagrant instances of coercion, intimidation and other undue and unfair influences, are known to have been employed by our opponents, and that, in the face of these odds, the Liberal candidate was elected, is indeed cause for congratulation.

R. W. MUNCASTER.

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

The moment the door had closed on him Mrs. Presty startled her daughter by taking up the card and looking at what Randal had written on it. "It isn't a letter, Catherine; and you know how superior I am to common prejudices." With that defense of her proceeding she coolly read the message. "I am sorry to say that I can tell you nothing more of your old friend's daughter as yet. I can only repeat that she neither needs nor deserves the help that you kindly offer to her." Mrs. Presty laid the card down again, and owned that she wished Randal had been a little more explicit. "Who can it be?" she wondered. "Another young hussy gone wrong?"

Kitty turned to her mother with a look of alarm. "What's a hussy?" she asked. "Does grandmamma mean me?" The great hotel clock in the hall struck 8, and the child's anxieties took a new direction. "Isn't it time my little friends came to see me?" she asked.

It was half an hour past the time. Catherine proposed to send to Lady Myrle and Mrs. Romsey and inquire if anything had happened to cause the delay. As she told Kitty to ring the bell the waiter came in with two letters addressed to Mrs. Ormond.

Mrs. Presty had her own ideas and drew her own conclusions. She watched Catherine attentively. Even Kitty observed that her mother's face grew paler and paler as she read the letters. "You look as if you were frightened, mamma." There was no reply. Kitty began to feel so uneasy on the subject of her dinner and her guests that she actually ventured on putting a question to her grandmother.

"Will they be long, do you think, before they come?" she asked.

The old lady's worldly wisdom had passed, by this time, from a state of suspicion to a state of certainty. "My child," she answered, "they won't come at all."

Kitty ran to her mother, eager to inquire if what Mrs. Presty had told her could possibly be true. Before a word had passed her lips she shrank back, too frightened to speak.

Never in her little experience had she been startled by such a look in her mother's face as the look that confronted her now. For the first time Catherine saw her child trembling at the sight of her. Before that discovery the emotions that shook her, under the insult which she had received, lost their hold. She caught Kitty up in her arms. "My darling, my angel, it isn't you I am thinking of. I love you! I love you! In the whole world there isn't such a good child, such a sweet, lovable, pretty child as you are. Oh, how disappointed she looks—she's crying. Don't break my heart! don't cry!" Kitty held up her head and cleared her eyes with a dash of her hand. "I won't, mamma." And, child as she was, she was as good as her word. Her mother looked at her and burst into tears.

Perversely reluctant, the better nature that was in Mrs. Presty rose to the surface, forced to show itself. "Cry, Catherine," she said, kindly; "it will do you good. Leave the child to me."

With a gentleness that astonished Kitty she led her little grand-daughter to the window and pointed to the public walk in front of the house. "I know what will comfort you," the wise old woman began; "look out of the window." Kitty obeyed. "I don't see my little friends coming," she said. Mrs. Presty still pointed to some object on the public walk. "That's better than nothing, isn't it?" she persisted. "Come with me to the maid; she shall go with you and take care of you." Kitty whispered: "May I give mamma a kiss first?" Sensible Mrs. Presty delayed the kiss for awhile. "Wait till you come back, and then you can tell your mamma what a treat you have had." Arrived at the door on their way out, Kitty whispered again: "I want to say something." "Well, what is it?" "Will you tell the donkey-boy to make him gallop?" "I'll tell the boy he shall have sixpence if you are satisfied; and you will see what he does then." Kitty looked up earnestly in her grandmother's face. "What a pity it is you are not always like what you are now!" she said. Mrs. Presty actually blushed.

CHAPTER XXIV.

For some time Catherine and her mother had been left together undisturbed.

Mrs. Presty had read the letters of Lady Myrle and Mrs. Romsey, with the most unfeigned contempt for the writers—had repeated what the judge had really said, as distinguished from Lady Myrle's malicious version of it—and had expressed her intention of giving Catherine a word of advice, when she was sufficiently composed to profit by it. "You have recovered your good looks, after that fit of crying," Mrs. Presty admitted, "but not your good spirits. What is worrying you now?"

"I can't help thinking of poor Kitty."

"My dear, the child wants nobody's pity. She's blowing away all her troubles by a ride in the fresh air on the favorite donkey that she feeds every morning. Yes, yes, you needn't tell me you are in a false position, and nobody can deny that it's shameful to make the child feel it. Now listen to me. Properly understood, those two spiteful women have done you a kindness. They have as good as told you how to protect yourself in time to come. Deceive the vile world, Catherine, as it deserves to be deceived. Shelter yourself behind a respectable character that will spare you these insults in the future." In the energy of her conviction Mrs. Presty struck her fist on the table, and finished in three audacious words: "Be a widow."

It was plainly said—and yet Catherine seemed to be at a loss to understand what her mother meant.

"Don't doubt about it," Mrs. Presty went on; "do it. Think of Kitty if you won't think of yourself. In a few years more she will be a young lady. She may have an offer of marriage, which may be everything we desire. Suppose her sweetheart's family is a religious family; and suppose your divorce, and the judge's remarks on it, are discovered. What will happen then?"

"Is it possible that you are in earnest?" Catherine asked. "Have you seriously thought of the advice that you are giving me? Setting aside the deceit, you know as well as I do that Kitty would ask questions. Do you think that I can tell my child that her father is dead? A lie—and such a shameful lie as that!"

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Presty.

"Nonsense?" Catherine repeated, reproachfully.

"Rank nonsense," her mother persisted. "Hasn't your situation altered for the better already? When the child asks why her father and her grandmother have left us, haven't you been subject to divorce reasons which are lies? If the man who was once your husband isn't as good as dead to you, I should like to know what your divorce means! My poor child, do you think you can go on as you are going on now? How many thousands of people have read the newspaper account of the trial? How many hundreds of people, interested in a handsome woman like you, will wonder why they never see Mr. Ormond? What? You will go abroad again? Go where you may you will attract attention; you will make an enemy of every ugly woman who looks at you. Strain at a gnat, my dear, and swallow a camel. It's only a question of time. Sooner or later you will find yourself driven to it; you will be a widow. Here's the waiter again. What does the man want now?"

The waiter answered by announcing "Capt. Bennydeck."

Catherine's mother was nearer to the door than Catherine; she attracted the captain's attention first. He addressed his apologies to her: "Pray excuse me for disturbing you."

Mrs. Presty had an eye for a handsome man, irrespective of what his age might be. In the language of the conjurers, a "magic change" appeared in her; she became brightly agreeable in a moment.

"Oh, Capt. Bennydeck, you mustn't make excuses for coming into your own room!"

Capt. Bennydeck went on with his excuses nevertheless. "The landlady tells me that I have unskilfully missed seeing Mr. Randal Linley, and that he has left a message for me. I shouldn't otherwise have ventured—"

Mrs. Presty stopped him once more. The captain's claim to the captain's rooms was the principle on which she took her stand. She revived the irresistible smiles which had conquered Mr. Ormond and Mr. Presty. "No ceremony, I beg and pray! You are at home here—take the easy-chair!"

Catherine advanced a few steps; it was time to stop her mother, if the thing could be done. She felt just embarrassed enough to heighten her color and to show her beauty to the greatest advantage. It literally staggered the captain the moment he looked at her. His customary composure as a well-bred man deserted him; he bowed confusedly; he had not a word to say. Mrs. Presty seized her opportunity and introduced them to each other. "My daughter, Mrs. Ormond—Capt. Bennydeck." Compassionating him, under the impression that he was a shy man, Catherine tried to set him at ease. "I am indeed glad to have an opportunity of thanking you," she said, inviting him by gesture to be seated. "In this delightful air I have recovered my health, and I owe it to your kindness."

The captain regained his self-possession. Expressions of gratitude had been addressed to him which, in his modest estimate of himself, he could not feel that he had deserved.

"You little know," he replied, "under what interested motives I have acted. When I established myself in this hotel I was fairly driven out of my yacht by a guest who went sailing with me."

Mrs. Presty became deeply interested. "Dear me, what did he do?"

Capt. Bennydeck answered, gravely: "He snored."

Devices of Advertisers.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes becomes shy of the tempting paragraph, fearing the advice that is concealed in it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be a cure for a disease at once loathesome to friends and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer. 6dw52

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw1if

The History of Hundreds.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1886.
GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success among others, recently, two spring trusses made in York State, costing me $60. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child ever; and 99 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions to be answered in connection with this paper. CARD OF THANKS.

I desire to take this opportunity to return my most cordial thanks to those of my friends who have contributed to my return as representative of West Peterborough in the Ontario Legislature. I have, especially, to thank the young men who have so nobly worked and stood by me, also those Conservatives who have given me their support in the contest, and also those old stand-bys of the Reform party who have worked with their old-time good-will and energy; and last, but not least, I would especially acknowledge the assistance I received from the moral support of the large number of ladies who interested themselves in my election. To those who felt it their duty to vote against me, I hope to show that my course in Parliament will be such as to constitute me the representative of the whole riding—majority and minority alike. Again thanking all those who in any way assisted in my election, I beg to remain,

Very faithfully,

J. R. STRATTON.

Messrs. Stratton and Blezard Elected.

Successful Outcome of a Plucky Fight—The Returns of the Voting—The Banner Sub-divisions.

The contest on Tuesday in the West and East Ridings resulted in a decisive victory for the cause of good government—the return of two staunch supporters of the Mowat Government. The contest in this riding was quietly though briskly conducted, especially in town.

When returns began to come in, the banner Ward, No. 1, leading with a majority of 20 for Stratton, instead of a majority of 86 for his opponent, the Liberals felt that victory was within their reach. But when No. 4 Ward, with its "mechanical majority" of 57, reported, hope was less roseate, but when the total for the town came in, and Mr. Carnegie had only a majority of 65, against a majority of 126 last election, it was felt that the county was sound, and that therefore the "county was safe," and that our man would be elected, and when Enniskmore reported with the rousing majority of 96 and Galway with 43, for Stratton, all doubt ended, and the crowds that packed the Young Men's club rooms and thronged the stairs, repaired to the Opera House, where an immense crowd exchanged congratulations and addresses were delivered (Mr. Haslitt in the chair) by Mr. Geo. A. Cox, Mr. Stratton, the member-elect, and many others. The final returns, which give Mr. Stratton a majority of 34, are as below:—

The Opera House Entertainment—Not the Kind Expected—The Play for To-Night.

The exigencies of political life last night demanded a large hall, in which the returned member for the Ontario Legislature could address the electors, and for this purpose the Woodward Dramatic Co. were induced to withhold the presentation of the play "Won at Last," and give up the Opera House for speaking. To-night, however, "Won at Last" will be presented, and it should draw a large house. Friday night a benefit will be given to Miss Lindeman, when she will appear in the leading role in "La Belle Rosse," a companion play to "Forget Me Not," and from the same French source. In this play Miss Lindeman's dresses are said to be superb wonders of art, and from her well known ability as an emotional actress, a first-class entertainment is expected. "Won at Last" to-night. Low prices. Secure seats early.

Personal.

Mr. James Menzies, foreman of the Ottawa Free Press, a Peterborough boy, was on Friday last presented by his fellow-workmen with an address and a beautiful gold-headed cane. Mr. Menzies is well known in Peterborough, and his old companions and friends, will be pleased to hear of the esteem in which he is held in Ottawa. Happy New Year.

Facts Regarding the J. C. Ayer & Co. Seizure.

For upwards of a quarter of a century the firm of J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., has had a branch manufactory of their medical preparations at St. John, P. Q. To that point they have been in the habit of shipping, in bulk, certain ingredients in the form of liquid syrups to be used in the manufacture of their Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla, which syrups were subsequently compounded with other ingredients, bottled, wrapped, and made ready for sale in the Dominion. Duties were paid on the syrups on the basis of invoices showing the cost of the materials, and also of the mixing the same together in the shape in which they were shipped, the Customs authorities being fully cognizant of the character of the articles, and the purpose for which they were being imported. Three years ago an increased duty of $1.90 per imperial gallon, in the nature of an excise tax, was imposed upon the liquids so imported in bulk, which duty was thereafter regularly paid. The Canadian law under which the appraisement was made, reads as follows: "The Appraiser or the Collector of Customs, as the case may be, shall, by all reasonable ways and means in his or their power, ascertain, estimate, and appraise at the true and fair market value and wholesale price, any invoice or affidavit thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, of the goods at the time of exportation, and in the principal markets of the country whence the same have been imported into Canada, and the proper weights, measures, and other quantities, and the fair market value and wholesale price of each of them, as the case requires." This law was literally complied with, the duties being paid, as before stated, upon the separate ingredients and the cost of their compounding into syrups, those elements constituting the entire "wholesale price," or "market value" that could be attached to them. In May, 1885, however, Messrs. Ayer & Co. received the astounding notification that all their goods then in Canada, amounting in value to about $84,000, had been seized. They were further informed that the duties on their goods were thenceforward to be appraised at 50 per cent. on the price in the United States of the finished medicines, and that a fine had been imposed upon the firm, in addition, of 50 per cent. of the entire duties so assessed on several years importations, the claim amounting in all, to $147,000. The seizure without prior warning, and the imposition of the large penalty named, were the outcome of a scheme concocted by some discharged employes of the firm, in collusion with certain seizure officers, whose motive is explained by the fact that two-thirds of the penalty would, if recovered, go to the informers. Messrs. Ayer & Co., however, have not paid the fine, nor do they intend to pay it, until the courts have adjudicated upon the legality of the seizure, as well as upon the right of the Canadian Government to assess duties upon goods which have no commercial existence, appraisable in that way, and which cannot properly be considered or treated as merchantable articles until after they have been completed and made ready for the market in Canada, after importation. Interest in the subject was revived recently by a statement, to which some currency was given by the press, that a man in Montreal, named Walters, had, in August, attempted to secure possession of the papers of the Ayer concern by offering $10,000 to their custodians, as a bribe professedly from the firm. It is hardly necessary to state that the allegation was promptly and effectively refuted by Messrs. Ayer & Co., besides receiving a local refutation from the Hon. D. Macmaster, M.P., Queen's Counsel in Montreal. The established reputation of the house of J. C. Ayer & Co., for honorable dealing, extending over nearly a generation, and the great wealth of the concern, render it absurd to American ears to hear them charged with petty attempts at violation of customs laws. In the light of the decisions made by the Revenue Department of the United States, they are the victims of a gross wrong. The goods imported by them into Canada are, in fact, destitute of market value as merchantable commodities, and, rightfully, could only be invoiced, as was done, at their cost value. The subsequent labor, including the addition of several important ingredients purchased in Canada, the making of the bottles, the manufacture and bottling of the medicines, and the labeling, wrapping and boxing the same, was all done in Canada. The determination of Messrs. Ayer & Co. to contest the matter meets with hearty approbation on both sides of the Canadian line, and there can be little question that the Dominion courts, on a fair presentment of the case, will put to confusion the piratical scheme of which the foregoing is a fair and unbiased statement.—Am. Analyst, Nov. 15, 1886.

Educational Notes.

Some changes have taken place in the staff of teachers of the Boys' Separate school. Mrs. M. J. McGillis goes to Brockton (part of Toronto) as principal of that school, and will be succeeded by Miss Annie Lynch, a graduate of the Ottawa Normal School; and Miss Ellie Hurley, who had charge of the junior division for the past five years, and who intends writing at the next examination for a higher grade certificate, will be succeeded by Miss O'Connell, of Hamilton, also a Normal School graduate. Mrs. McGillis and Miss Hurley were presented on the eve of their departure, by the pupils and teachers, with costly presents and addresses. Much regret was expressed at their departure. The change was made at the expressed desire of the teachers departing, themselves. The teaching staff of Boys' Separate school for 1887 will consist of J. D. McIlmoyle, Principal; Miss K. Leonard, 2nd division; Miss Annie Lynch, 3rd division; and Miss O'Connell, 4th division. All the teachers are Normal School graduates, and it is to be expected that the high state of efficiency in which the school now is will be creditably maintained in the future.

HELLO! BROWN,

"What are you looking so mad about, this morning?"

"Well, I'll tell you, Jones. I bought a very fine Tent from TURNER, and one of my friends wanted to borrow it."

"And did you lend it?"

"Well, I guess not. The last Tent I had got used up by lending. I told him to go to J. J. TURNER, the great Tent maker, and he would rent or sell him a tent."

"You did right, Brown."

"Good morning, Jones."

EXPLANATORY!

Or, a Few Facts for This Week.

An Explicit Fact which we wish the public to understand, and that is, that we are selling a pure All Wool Grey Flannel at 18c. per yard.

An Excitable Fact that we are selling Heavy Tweed Effects for Dresses at 8c. per yard which astonish every lady that has seen them.

An Eventful Fact to be remembered is our Ulster and Mantle Cloths and the prices which we are selling them at.

A Fact of Integrity and that is we keep faith with the public in every article we advertised.

A Fact to be Remembered and that is we don't sell or propose to sell goods at cost, nor do we sell you the best All Wool Flannels at 18c. per yard, we sell you the goods as we advertise them. It would never do to sell Flannels that cost 30c. per yard at 18c.

BLACK SILK—We have the best Black Gro Grain Silk at $1.00 per yard in Canada, and every lady is welcome to compare it with any silk she wishes at 20 per cent higher.

TO DEPOSITORS—Deposits are received by this Company both on account current and for periods of one year or more, upon which interest is allowed at the highest rate current from time to time, payable half-yearly, or compounded with the principal yearly, and the rate on yearly deposits is FIVE per cent.

TO INVESTORS—The first and ten years FIVE PER CENT DEBENTURES of this Company, transferable by endorsement, with interest coupons attached, payable at the Head Office of the Company in Peterborough, or at any Branch of the Bank of Toronto in Canada, afford a safe and profitable mode of investment.

The funds of the Company being invested in first mortgages on Real Estate, the holders may rest assured that their investments are absolutely safe, while the interest realized thereon enables the Company to allow a liberal rate of interest on the moneys entrusted to it, and that interest is paid or compounded half-yearly, as may be most convenient to the depositor, thus yielding the highest possible return on that value.

ANTI-RENT CAMPAIGN

HEALY DEFENDS IT IN A SPEECH AT GLASGOW.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Mr. Healy, addressing a meeting at Glasgow, said he was glad to see signs which indicated that Chamberlain was returning to the Liberal fold. He thought it was extremely unlikely that Hartington would enter the Conservative Cabinet. Regarding the "plan of campaign" which the National League is conducting in the interests of Irish tenants, Healy denied that there was anything dishonest in the movement.

Catholic Jurors Rejected.

DUBLIN, Dec. 29.—At the Sligo Assizes today another batch of Woodford prisoners were arraigned for trial. All the Catholic jurors on the panel were rejected. Counsel for the prisoners thereupon left court.

The Riot Commission.

BELFAST, Dec. 29.—The commission which has been making an investigation regarding the riots here last summer recommends that two lawyers be appointed resident magistrates in place of the local justices, and that the complete control of the police be vested in a town inspector, who shall be responsible to the Inspector General alone. The commission urges the rigorous suppression of party processions.

GLADSTONE'S BIRTHDAY

Enlarged With Congratulations From all Parts of the World.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—To-day was the seventy-seventh anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's birth. He attended early service at the Hawarden Church and during the day was fairly deluged with telegrams of congratulation from all parts of the world. He was also the recipient of innumerable presents.

Mr. Gladstone wrote as follows to the chairman of a banquet given at Chester in honor of his birthday: "The strain of the last year has been considerable, but never during my path of duty have I more clearly seen that I was at work in behalf of my countrymen in all parts of the three kingdoms, and in behalf of the union and greatness of the Empire, which in this year of Her Majesty's jubilee we ought to cherish more warmly and loyally than ever. In this conviction the recent progress of events confirms me daily."

THE CAMPBELL CASE.

It May be Carried to the House of Lords for Adjudication.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Lord Colin Campbell's application for a new trial of the divorce suit brought by his wife against him is in the nature of a technical application, which, if granted, will reopen the old case and not inaugurate a new trial. It will, in other words, be a new contest between the lawyers on the old evidence before a new jury. If Lord Colin fails in this effort he will, it is said, take his case before the House of Lords for final adjudication.

A Scottish Crime.

CAIRO, Ill., Dec. 29.—Thomas Spicer, colored, died from injuries inflicted by Henry Hayes and Thomas Mahan on Sunday night. The trio were in a saloon when Hayes and Mahan began tantalizing the negro. Finally they threw him down, poured turpentine over his clothing and set him on fire. The victim was burned from chin to knees, and the flesh came off his body with his clothing. The fiends were jailed.

Outrages of European Women.

This edict is now applied to workmen and apprentices. The certificates cost seven hundred roubles, a sum which few are able to pay, and the result will be wholesale expulsions.

Blood in the City of Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, Dec. 29.—A duel with swords was fought here yesterday between Prince Augusto Barbiele and Senor Cercado, both members of the Jockey Club. The Prince received his antagonist in the shoulder, but not seriously. The affair has excited much comment, both gentlemen being of high social standing.

To Endow the Marriage on Logan's Home.

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—A fund has been started here to raise the mortgage on the Chicago home of General Logan. D. B. Farwell headed the subscription with $1000. It is expected that any surplus will be applied to the fund being raised for Mrs. Logan.

ELECTION ECHOES.

The seats won by the Liberals are: Ottawa, West Northumberland, Stormont (formerly Stormont and Cornwall), East Elgin, Dundas, Russell, Toronto (new), West York, North Essex (although still in doubt) and West Peterboro—10.

The Conservatives won seven seats formerly held by Liberals: West Hastings, Lennox, West Elgin, East Northumberland, East Middlesex, West Victoria and Muskoka.

Parry Sound, now represented by Mr. Armstrong, Ind., is a new seat.

The most notable defeats were among the old members of the House. Mr. Carnegie (Con.) was defeated in West Peterboro by Mr. Stratton (Lib.) 45; Mr. Carnegie was a charter member of the House (1867), but he has not sat continuously in it ever since as has Mr. Pardee (Lib., West Lambton) and Dr. Baxter (Lib., Haldimand), who are also charter members of the House. Mr. Sol. White's (Con.) defeat in North Essex by Mr. Pearsall is a surprise. So is Mr. Ferris' (Lib.) defeat in East Northumberland by Mr. Willoughby. Mr. Coughlan (Con.) had a very narrow escape in North Grey, where his majority is said to be but 7. Other members of the last House who were defeated were: Mr. Sills (Lib.) in West Hastings, Mr. Hawley (Lib.) in Lennox, Mr. Macbeath (Lib.) in East Middlesex, Mr. McIntyre (Lib.) in West Victoria and Mr. Bassinville (Con.) in Ottawa.

The new members of the House-about number 21. They are Miller (Con., Addington), Wood (Lib., N. Brant), Major Bigger (Con., N. Bruce), Mr. Stewart (Con., Dufferin), Mr. Chamberlain (Lib., Dundas), Mr. Craig (Con., E. Durham), Mr. Nairn (Lib., E. Elgin), Mr. Ingram (Con., W. Elgin), Mr. Pearsall (Lib., N. Essex), Mr. Ostrom (Con., W. Hastings), Mr. Hilliard (Lib., N. Lennox), Mr. Monahan (Con., Lennox), Mr. Garson (Labor, Lisgar), Mr. Tooley (Con., E. Middlesex, sat in the House some years ago), Mr. Marter (Con. Muskoka), Mr. Willoughby (Con., E. Northumberland), Mr. Field (Lib., W. Northumberland), Mr. Bronson (Lib., Ottawa), Mr. McKay (Lib., S. Oxford), Mr. Armstrong (Ind., Parry Sound), Mr. Stratton (Lib., West Peterboro), Mr. Evanturel (Lib., Prescott), Mr. A. Robillard (Lib., Napoleon brother of late member), Mr. Wylie (Con., W. Simcoe), (Mr. Mack (Lib., Stormont), Mr. Loye (Lib., Toronto), Mr. E.F. Clarke (Con., Toronto), Mr. Orasee (Con., W. Victoria), Mr. Guthrie (Lib., S. Wellington), Mr. Allan (Lib., W. RUSSIA DESIRES WAR.

THE AUSTRIAN PRESS CONVINCED ON THAT POINT.

VIENNA, Dec. 29.—The press of Vienna is becoming convinced that Russia is determined on war. The reports of increased Russian armaments are continually coming to hand from various sources. The latest intelligence is that 20,000 Russian troops have been ordered to mass in Kieff, and that the occupants of 10,000 houses have received official notification that soldiers will soon be billeted on them. The News Frele Presse plainly hints that the best thing Austria can do is to submit to Russia's wishes in order to avoid a conflict.

The Tagblatt and other papers bitterly deplore the fact that Austria is compelled to abandon her Balkan program because she has been left in the lurch by Bismarck, who has made peace with Russia.

France Would Remain Passive.

VIENNA, Dec. 29.—M. Clemenceau, a French statesman, has been interviewed respecting the possibility of a war between France and Germany. He said: "There can be no war between France and Germany unless Germany makes the first attack, because every responsible Frenchman is determined that France shall offer no provocation. Even if Russia and Germany should fight, France should remain passive. It would require gross provocation, indeed, to rouse France to war. Of course France will refuse to disarm. It must be admitted that France has been coquetting with Russia, but this was intended merely to frighten Germany."

MERCIER TO MOWAT.

Quebec's Provincial Bonus Leader Congratulates Ontario's Premier.

MONTREAL, Dec. 29.—Hon. Mr. Mercier today sent the following despatch to the Premier of Ontario:

MONTREAL, Dec. 29, 1886.—To the Hon. Oliver Mowat, Toronto: Please accept for you personally, for your enlightened colleagues and for the good people of your fair province, my most sincere congratulations on the splendid victory achieved yesterday under your able leadership.

Thank God the cry of Race and Sectarian raised by fanatics was unsuccessful in Ontario as it was in Quebec, and your people proved yesterday that they are not to be led astray by appeals to religious prejudices made with hypocrisy to conceal the political crimes of their party. Your people also proved yesterday that they are decided to keep faith with the Catholic minority by refusing to take away from it the rights and privileges the Protestant minority enjoys in Quebec. Those rights and privileges of the Protestant minority are not in any danger here, but if ever they were threatened all good citizens, headed by our venerable clergy and cheerfully sanctioned by Nationalists, would unite in their defence.

In concluding, let us hope to see, in a few days, a new Quebec Government extending a fraternal hand to Ontario and the other Provincial Governments to resist in common numerous encroachments of Sir John against the autonomy of the provinces and to mould together amid the peace and harmony of all races and creeds, a great nation of which all true Canadians shall be proud.

HONORE MERCIER

MISS KARCH.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1886.

THE GENERAL RESULT.

The result of Tuesday's voting over the province is a signal triumph for Hon. Mr. Mowat, and it goes to show that a government that appeals to the people for a renewal of confidence, upon an unparalleled record of honest, economical and successful administration, need not fear that the good sense and good judgment of the people of an intelligent province like Ontario will be warped by narrow, bigoted, sectarian side issues; and that they cannot be persuaded to lend themselves to the execution of a miserable "pulp-tower" plot to plant the seeds of sectarian strife and religious bigotry in a peaceful and harmonious community.

No other result than the existing one could have been expected. On the one hand, we had a good solid, firm, patriotic and honest Administration appealing to the people for a renewal of the trust that had been reposed in it for fourteen years; on the other hand we had Mr. Meredith with no following that had weight enough to give the people a single argument for displacing with Mr. Mowat a coterie of political nonentities. In 1882 Mr. Meredith ceased to be a Provincial politician; he went back on the Province and became the lieutenant and ally of Sir John Macdonald, who has ever been and is still aggressively hostile to this Province. Mr. Meredith did not plan the conduct of the late campaign that has ended so disastrously for him. While he tacitly accepted the aid of the wretched cry raised by the Mail, and which the people have so decidedly rebuked, neither he nor his professed following had the courage or wisdom to repudiate it, and they have, therefore, to accept, with as good a grace as possible, the disastrous consequences of it. Mr. Meredith came before the people without a practical policy; the people have rejected him and said, as if in plain words, they are satisfied with the Mowat Administration, and that a spiritless, shifty, unresolute tool, in the hands of Federal politicians, is not the man to be entrusted with the control of the destinies of a great province like Ontario. The Federal Government had determined at the recent elections to make good the old time menace of the Mail, that "Mowat must go." To this end all the power, influence and resources of the Dominion Government was arrayed against the Mowat Administration, the meanest, most despicable, and most insidious system of attack was concocted, but all to no purpose. The outside, as well as internal enemies of Ontario have been repulsed, and the Mowat Administration has been returned to power for another term of four years, and with a following whose strength will not this time tempt the operations of the "brawling brood of bribers." Hon. Mr. Mowat has passed triumphantly through the ordeal of four general elections—a record which no other prime minister in history can boast of. His course has been subjected to the severest hostile criticism, the most intelligent, well-read, and fully-informed body of electors in the world have four times fully canvassed his claims and have four times decidedly vindicated his course. With a less intelligent, less loyal and less patriotic, and liberal-minded constituency than Ontario, the sectarian and other silly cries might have been "worked" to advantage, but here the task was hopeless. The sword designed to decapitate Mr. Mowat has proved to be a two-edged one, and the deepest cut has been given the wrong way, to the confusion of the mischievous bigots that brandished it. While the triumphant return of the Mowat Administration is a cause for rejoicing, perhaps the most gratifying feature of the recent elections is the fact that the people have emphatically decided that the party that tries to revive the spirit of the sectarian bigotry of the dark ages is the bitterest foe to the peace and prosperity of a province of a mixed population, and this decision has been so emphatically given that such base cries have been silenced forever.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

An entertainment, got up by Miss McDonald, teacher, took place in School Section No. 4, Smith, on Thursday evening, the 23rd inst., by request of the children, which consisted of singing, recitations, readings and dialogues, and one tableau representing the Government in session. The choir sang well. A song given by Albert Garbutt, in costume, was given a hearty encore, and then he gave "Black-eyed Joe." A duet by two of the pupils, Florence Davidson and Tessie Fitzgerald, was well given, and a solo by Jessie Jackson with very good effect. The musical part of the entertainment was managed by Miss Corbett, who deserves great credit for the way the children sang, as one of the managers, take this opportunity of thanking Mr. John Moore for his kindness in erecting a very suitable platform for the benefit of the children, and I also say that the people of the School Section cannot say too much in favor of Mrs. E. J. Heal for her kindness in giving the use of her organ and her assistance in our entertainments always. The children gave their teacher an address and a present, to which she made a suitable reply.

Election of Lorne Lodge, A. F. & A. M., officers last week; installation December 27th, 1886.

The evangelistic services conducted by Mr. George Marsh, in the village of Omemee, were brought to a close by the evangelist giving a highly interesting account of his labors among the 20,000 men, who on the north shore of Lake Superior, were constructing the C. P. R. The village hall was filled each night, with a thoughtful congregation, who listened most attentively to the solid gospel preaching. Mr. Marsh's appeals to the unconverted, were with a power hard to be resisted, resulting in the salvation of not a few.

Mr. Marsh commenced a mission last Sunday in the Presbyterian Church, Mount Pleasant. The church was crowded.

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC MYSTERY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Catherine was amused; Mrs. Presty burst out laughing; the captain's dry humor asserted itself as quaintly as ever. "This is no laughing matter," he remarked, looking at Catherine. "My vessel is a small one. For two nights the awful music of my friend's nose kept me sleepless. When I woke him and said 'Don't snore,' he apologized in the sweetest manner and began. On the third day I anchored in the bay here, determined to get a night's rest on shore. A dispute about the price of these rooms offered them to me. I sent a note of apology on board—and slept peacefully. The next morning my sailing-master informed me that there had been what he called 'a little swell in the night.' He reported the sounds made by my friend on this occasion to have been the awful sounds of seasickness. 'The gentleman, left the yacht, sir, the first thing this morning,' he said; 'and he's gone home by railway.' On the day when you happened to arrive my cabin was my own again; and I can honestly thank you for relieving me of my rooms. Do you make a long stay here, Mrs. Ormond?"

Catherine answered that they were going to London by the next train. Seeing Randal's card unnoticed on the table, she handed it to the captain.

"Is Mr. Linley an old friend of yours?" he asked as he took the card.

Mrs. Presty hastened to answer in the affirmative for her daughter. It was plain that Randal had discreetly abstained from mentioning his true connection with them. Would he preserve the same silence if the captain spoke of his visit to Mrs. Ormond when he and his friend met next? Mrs. Presty's mind might have been at ease on that subject if she had known how to appreciate Randal's character and Randal's motives. The same keen sense of the family disgrace which had led him to conceal from Capt. Bennydeck his brother's illicit relations with Sydney Westerfield had compelled him to keep secret his former association, as brother-in-law, with the divorced wife. Her change of name had hitherto protected her from discovery by the captain, and would in all probability continue to protect her in the future. The good Bennydeck had been enjoying himself at sea when the divorce was granted and when the newspapers reported the proceedings. He rarely went to his club, and he never associated with persons of either sex to whom gossip and scandal are as the breath of their lives. Ignorant of these circumstances, and remembering what had happened on that day, Mrs. Presty looked at him with some anxiety on her daughter's account while he was reading the message on Randal's card. There was little to see. His fine face expressed a quiet sorrow, and he sighed as he put the card back in his pocket.

An interval of silence followed. Capt. Bennydeck was thinking over the message which he had just read. Catherine and her mother were looking at him with the same interest, inspired by very different motives. The interview so pleasantly begun was in some danger of lapsing into formality and embarrassment when a new personage appeared on the scene.

Kitty had returned in triumph from her ride. "Oh, mamma, the donkey did more than gallop—he kicked, and I never fell off." She had got as far as that when the progress of her narrative was suspended by the discovery of a strange gentleman in the room.

The smile that brightened the captain's face when Kitty opened the door answered for him as the man who loved children. "Your little girl, Mrs. Ormond?" he said.

"Yes."

(A common question and a common reply. Nothing worth noticing in either the one or the other at the time—and yet shortly proved to be important enough to turn Catherine's life into a new course.)

In the meanwhile Kitty had been whispering to her mother, the request to know the strange gentleman's name. The captain heard her. "My name is Bennydeck," he said; "will you come to me?"

Kitty had heard the name mentioned in connection with a yacht. Like all children, she knew a friend the moment she looked at him. "I've seen your pretty boat, sir," she said, crossing the room to Capt. Bennydeck. "Is it very nice when you go sailing?"

"If you were not going back to London, my dear, I should ask your mamma to let me take you sailing with me. Perhaps we shall have another opportunity."

The captain's suggestion delighted Kitty. "Oh, yes, to-morrow or next day!" she suggested. "Do you know where to find me in London? Mamma, where do I live, when I am in London?" Before her mother could answer, she hit on a new idea. "Don't tell me; I'll find it myself. It's on grandmamma's boxes, and they're in the passage."

Capt. Bennydeck's eyes followed her, as she left the room, with the expression of interest which more than confirmed the favorable impression that he had already produced on Catherine. She was on the point of asking if he was married and had children of his own when Kitty came back, and declared the right address to be Buck's hotel, Sydenham. "Mamma puts the figs down for fear of forgetting them," she added. "Will you put down Buck?"

The captain picked up his pocket-book and appealed pleasantly to Mrs. Ormond. "May I follow your example?" he asked. Catherine not only honored the little joke, but, gratefully remembering his kindness, said: "Don't forget when you are in London that Kitty's invitation is my invitation, too." At the same moment punctual Mrs. Presty looked at her watch and reminded her daughter that railways were not in the habit of allowing passengers to keep them waiting. Catherine rose and gave her hand to the captain at parting. Kitty improved on her mother's form of farewell; she gave him a kiss and whispered a little reminder of her own: "There's a river in London—don't forget your boat."

Capt. Bennydeck opened the door for them and stood by it, secretly wishing that he could accompany Mrs. Ormond and Kitty to London.

Mrs. Presty made no attempt to remind him that she was still in the room. Where her family interests were concerned the old lady was capable on very slight encouragement of looking a long way into the future. She was looking into the future now. The captain's social position was all that could be desired; he was evidently in easy pecuniary circumstances; he admired Catherine and Catherine's child. If he only proved to be a single man, Mrs. Presty's [illegible] soul, without [illegible] perceived a dazzling future. "Capt. Bennydeck approached to take leave. "Not just yet," pleaded the quick-witted old woman; "my luggage will really [illegible]. Sit down again for a few minutes. You seem to like my little grand-daughter."

"If I had such a child as that," the captain answered, "I believe I should be the happiest man living."

"Ah, my dear sir, all isn't said that glitters," Mrs. Presty remarked. "That proverb must have been originally intended to apply to children. May I presume to make you the subject of a guess? I fancy you are not a married man."

The captain looked a little surprised. "You are quite right," he said; "I have never been married."

At a later period Mrs. Presty owned that she felt an inclination to reward him for confessing himself to be a bachelor by a kiss. He instantly checked that impulse by putting a question. "Had you any particular reason," he asked, "for guessing that I was a single man?"

Mrs. Presty modestly acknowledged that she had only her own experience to help her. "You wouldn't be quite so fond of other people's children," she said, "if you were a married man. Ah, your time will come yet—I mean your wife will come."

He answered this sadly. "My time has gone by. I have never had the opportunities that have been granted to many favored men." He thought of the favored man who had married Mrs. Ormond. Was her husband worthy of his happiness? "Is Mr. Ormond with you at this place?" the captain asked.

Strange accent—considered on the manner in which this question was answered. For one moment, and for one moment only, Mrs. Presty hesitated. Then (in her daughter's interests, of course) she put Catherine in the position of a widow, in the least blamable of all possible ways, by honestly owning the truth.

"There is no Mr. Ormond," she said.

"Your daughter is a widow!" cried the captain, perfectly unable to control his delight at that discovery.

"What else should she be?" Mrs. Presty replied, facetiously.

What else, indeed! If "no Mr. Ormond" meant (as it must mean) that Mr. Ormond was dead, and if the beautiful mother of Kitty was an honest woman, what else could she be but a widow? Capt. Bennydeck felt a little ashamed of his own impetuosity. Before he had made up his mind what to say next the unlucky waiter (doomed to be a cause of disturbance on that day) appeared again.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am," he said; "the lady and gentleman who have taken these rooms have just arrived."

Mrs. Presty got up in a hurry and cordially shook hands with the captain. Looking round she took up the railway guide and her knitting left on the table. Was there anything else left about? There was nothing to be seen. Mrs. Presty crossed the passage to her daughter's bedroom to hurry the packing. Capt. Bennydeck went down-stairs on his way back to the yacht.

In the hall of the hotel he passed the lady and gentleman, and, of course, noticed the lady. She was little and dark and would have been pretty if she had not looked ill and out of spirits. What would he have said, what would he have done, if he had known that those two strangers were Randal Linley's brother and Roderick Westerfield's daughter?

Devices of Advertisers.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes becomes shy of the taunting paragraph, fearing the advice that is concealed in it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be a cure for a disease at once loathsome to friends, and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer. 6dw52

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung trouble have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eodw52

A Fugitive.

It appears to be an established truth that an ounce of keep-your-mouth-shut is better than a pound of explanations after you have said it.

To Cure a Corn.

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. It is a simple matter to remove corns without a pain, for if you will go to any druggist or medicine dealer and buy a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, and apply it as directed the thing is done. Get Putnam's and no other. 6dw32

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1886.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in New York State, costing me $16. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

New Coinage.

Some suspicion as to the genuineness of the new twenty-five cent pieces now circulating having been caused by the want of the letter "B" on the reverse side, just below the wreath of maple leaves, it may be stated that none of the coinage of 1886, either twenty-five, ten or five cent pieces, has the letter "B."

Professor Tracy's Daughter.

An Interesting Story Dramatized—Presented at the Opera House Last Night to a Large Audience—The Play To-night.

"Won at Last" is an intensely thrilling drama in parts, and the plot of the play is worthy its great author. "Grace" is engaged to marry Will Tracy, son of Prof. and Mrs. Tracy, with whom she lives as adopted daughter. Young Tracy is wrecked on his own vessel and believed to be lost, and for four years nothing is heard of him. After that lapse of time Grace marries John Fleming, accidentally discovers on her wedding day that he is marrying her for money alone, and refuses to accompany him. Suddenly Will Tracy turns up. Grace is induced to go with her husband, and in her new home, through the machinations of Mrs. Bunker, a former Paris "flame," she discovers what she believes to be further evidences of his perfidy. All this time Fleming has been wakening to a love for his pure, faithful wife, and arrives on the scene in time to prevent her flight with Will Tracy. In the last act of the play explanations are made, re-union takes place, and the curtain descends on a happy domestic scene, the young wife "won at last" by the erring but repentant husband. Miss Lindeman, as "Grace," was, of course, the central figure, and right well did she maintain her part. Her emotional acting at times was something grand; scarce too much praise could be accorded her. Mr. Eugene Bertram impersonated "John Fleming" to perfection, while Bassett Willard, as "Will Tracy," was first-rate. George Woodward and James Rowland took the parts of "Prof. Tracy" and "Major Bunker" very well indeed. The play throughout was well rendered, and brought out the individual merits of two or three of the performers. To-night "Rip Van Winkle" will be repeated by special request. This is one of the finest plays in the repertoire of the Woodward Dramatic Company. Remember Miss Lindeman's benefit to-morrow night. She will appear in "La Belle Rose," an emotional drama of high class. Low prices—10, 20 and 30 cents.

Wedding Bells.

Yesterday afternoon about four o'clock a happy event transpired at the residence of Mrs. Johnston, Water street, being the marriage of her daughter, Hattie, to Mr. James H Billington, an old Peterborough boy, now located at Winnipeg. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. F. Torrance, Miss Nettie Mooscript acting as bridesmaid and Mr. Thos. MoJanet, of Ottawa, as groomsman. A large number of intimate friends and relatives attended the nuptial celebration, including visitors from Cobourg, Bowmanville, Lakefield, and other places. The bride was the recipient of an unusually handsome lot of wedding presents. The happy young couple left on the 4.32 train last evening for their new home in the far west, bearing with them the best wishes for future domestic felicity and enjoyment of hosts of warm friends in Peterborough.

To-day at noon Mr. George Fowler, Collector of Customs at Colborne, was united in marriage to Miss Louisa A. Matthews, of Peterborough. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Mr. Wallace, at the residence of the brides sister, Mrs. J. B. Dixon, George St. Mr. Will Dixon acted as groomsman, and Miss Dumble as bridesmaid. Though the marriage was quietly done and no invitations were distributed, a great many friends of the bride got wind of the affair and sent along their congratulations and gifts in abundance. Miss Matthews was for a number of years teacher in the Central School here, and in that capacity won the love and esteem of pupils and fellow-teachers alike. As Mrs Fowler her memory will be cherished by the many good friends she leaves in Peterborough. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler went to Colborne this afternoon.

London Advertiser.

The diabolical effort to create a war of creeds was fittingly rebuked at the polls, and the men who raised the cry of "No Popery" have been taught that the Reform party is not so bigoted that such an effort can be effectual.

Hard, indeed, is the life of a jockey who has to battle with increasing weight, says a writer in the London Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News. He has not only to take hard exercise and physic, but he has to do it on a diet that must be as spare as he can possibly do with. It is well known, however, that Archer tried to reduce himself without walking. He took physic often, but instead of walking had recourse to the Turkish bath. In wasting there is no rule save one, viz., eat and drink as little as you can live on while at the same time you get weight off as rapidly as possible in other ways. Ever since the necessity first arose for men to ride at the weight of boys, the jockey's life during the racing season has been an arduous one. John Day never missed his two hours' wasting walk after his frugal breakfast of a few spoonfuls of tea and a piece of bread and scrape. When he first began to get ready for riding he drew the scale at 126 pounds; but, with a three pound saddle, could ride 112 pounds when the season had fairly set in.

"This playing tricks with the constitution, however, often brought on illness, and, could the lives of jockeys be written, some very piteous tales would have to be recounted. Sam Chifney, meant by nature for a 140 pounds man, used to boil himself by ounces" to 114. Frank Butler only got down to 116 pounds on great occasions by dint of the most strenuous exertions; 'Tiny Wells,' in 1863, fainted on a Malton race morning when trying to get down to 75 pounds; while in later years Constable, French, Archer and others have fallen victims to the rigor with which they pursued their wasting. They did not, or could not, act up to 'Uncle Sam's' rule for wasting. 'No man,' he would say, 'can work if he can't eat, you can't get light without eating; have a good mutton chop, that's my style; it gives a tone to the stomach.' In his own case his maxims answered well enough, for after he had given up riding for the first time, he went in for farming, and under the influence of homely fare he soon weighed 160 pounds. Then he took to the racing saddle again, so that he was in a position to guarantee the truth of one of his sayings, viz: 'Depend upon it, a man doesn't enjoy the comforts of life unless he knows the wasting part of the business.'"

Looking Into Politics.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"A party leader," said Rollo, looking up from the paper, "is he the man who leads the party?" "Well, something like that," said Rollo's Uncle George; "he is the man who lies awake nights trying to guess which way the party wants to go, and when he finds out he scouts across lots and tries to get there first; he leads the party unless the party should happen to change its mind and go the other way; he leads the party the same as the leader in the stage team leads; he goes ahead but he goes the way the man on the box with the reins and whip tells him to go." Rollo said he thought he was beginning to see into politics as through a glass darkly, and Uncle George said that was the way old politicians usually looked into 'em.

In offering myself to represent you in the Town Council, I do so thinking I can be a benefit to you and myself, for, after all that has been said our taxes are rising to be a burden to us. EUROPEAN COMPLICATIONS.

The indications are that it is within the bounds of possibility—it indeed probability is not a fitter word—that before this year closes Europe may be involved in a terrible war. The latest cable advices go to show that Russia is continually increasing her armies and armaments, and that she now proposes to garrison Kiedl, an important strategical town, with 50,000 soldiers, and that 10,000 of the inhabitants have been officially notified to be prepared to have these troops billeted upon them. With Germany, France, Austria and Russia, armed to the teeth, so to speak, and with the eager of battle trembling in the hands of a half-mad, brandy-guzzling tyrant, like the Czar of Russia, there is no telling when the gauge may be thrown down and the country plunged into the vortex of a frightful international struggle. This age holds no stronger argument in favor of constitutional government, than the fact that an irresponsible tyrant has it in his power in some moment of drunken folly to take a course of action that will let slip the dogs of war and set millions of soldiers, armed with the most scientifically deadly devices of destruction, in opposing battle array.

The total of the majorities secured by Mr. Mowat and the ministers of his cabinet last Tuesday is 2,106, an average of 315.

There is a hot fight in Toronto this year over the mayoralty between W. H. Howland, the present incumbent, and the well-known David Blain. The indications are that the result will be a case of childbirth.

The Globe joyously points out that in all of the constituencies, which Sir John and his ministerial detachment visited, the Conservative candidate was either disastrously defeated or had his majority greatly reduced from what it was in 1883.

The majorities at the recent elections were, on the average, large. The average majority of the Liberals elected last Tuesday was 261, and the average majority of the Conservatives elected was 195. In the seats contested last Tuesday the sum of the Liberal majorities was 13,268, the sum of Conservative was 4,623. Throughout the province the Liberal majorities exceeded the Conservative majorities by 5,580, an average Liberal majority in the contested seats of a little over 100 for each riding.

We can heartily join in the remarks of the Globe when it says that the defeat of Mr. J. M. Ferris in East Northumberland is much to be regretted. Mr. Ferris is a gentleman of admirable personal qualities. He exercised a large influence in the House, and had made his mark as a legislator. Always zealous for the interest of his constituents, and faithful to his legislative duties, he deserved better at the hands of the electors of East Northumberland. He was not defeated on his merits as a candidate, or on his record as a legislator; and it is, perhaps, not too much to expect that East Northumberland will reverse the adverse verdict of Tuesday at the earliest opportunity.

Of all the members of the Cabinet, Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, has been the most conspicuous target of the shafts of the enemy. The administration of his department has been most minutely and unfairly criticised. Yet he has come out of the conflict unscathed and with all the honours of war. The result has not only been an overwhelming endorsation of the policy of the Government in educational matters, but it has been a flattering personal endorsement of Hon. Mr. Ross' course. In West Middlesex, where, at the elections of 1883, he got a majority of only 87, at the elections on Dec. 29th he secured the splendid majority of 200. The people of Ontario didn't "take much stock" in the tirade against cheap and superior school books, or in the hypocritical crusade against the Separate School law amendments, which passed unchallenged through two election contests, and were only smelled as a party dodge at the last general elections.

Kind Words From a Friendly Foe.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner.

Dear Sir:—I desire to congratulate you on the result of the election. You have won a splendid victory for a young man, and one you may well feel proud of. It is an indication that the electors have confidence in the rising young men of Canada. That you will show up at least equal to, if not better in courts in Peterboro, than you have done in the field, I feel confident. I have always found you a fair opponent, and a gentleman, who will make safe and worthy legislators.

For the past twenty years or more I have always been one in favor of the Conservative candidates, and I am convinced you owe your election as largely to support of this kind, given on personal grounds, by life-long and active Conservatives, as to any other cause. Again congratulating you on your success, I beg to remain,

Yours Respectfully,
An Abstainer.

A Resume of the Work Done by This Society During the Past Year—The Temperance Games Gaining.

In the last issue of the Woman's Journal, is the following letter from Peterborough concerning the Women's Christian Temperance Union here:—

Our membership numbers thirty, with an average attendance of thirteen. The reasons are plain in the afternoon which fact may partly account for the non-attendance at some, as home duties are often pressing. At the last meeting a motion was carried, to the effect that once a month the session be held in the evening. This will accommodate not only the home-cumbered matrons, but several working ladies, engaged during the day, who have signified their intention of joining the Union. There are a number of earnest Christian women in our circle by whom the devotional exercises are well sustained.

Throughout the summer the hospital was visited weekly, a bouquet, with scriptures text carefully selected, being provided for each patient, and also for members of the staff. These messengers were also sent to any sick or infirm person whose case was reported to us. The characters thus touched were many and varied, from the aged saint with whom the almond tree was blossoming, to the maiden prostrated by some sudden stroke of disease. We have striven to "sow beside all waters." Magazines and reading matter of various kinds were sent to invalids in hospital, and in private homes where it was deemed advisable. A committee was formed, whose duty it is to keep the hospital constantly supplied with cotton for bandages. This arrangement has proved a wonderful relief to the matron.

A large number of papers have been collected, and bashments sent to the lumbermen in different localities. For this purpose, London Illustrated News, and other valuable periodicals have been generously contributed by friends of the cause. Last August a Band of Hope was organized by Mrs. Jones, of Ottawa. The band numbers over one hundred. Weekly meetings are held, and the children are greatly interested. We trust that the young feet thus early trained to walk in wisdom's pleasant ways may never be led into forbidden paths, but that out of this organization shall be developed a community of morally vigorous men and women who shall assert, right valiantly, each great national crisis in the coming years.

One work accomplished was the canvassing of the town with two petitions—the appeal against the wine and beer clause being introduced into the Scott Act, and the World's Petition for Prohibition Law.

The question of closing all places of business at as early hour on Saturday nights has been ventilated, but the interests of so many are interwoven with the present system that progress will necessarily be slow. As one step in the right direction, the members of the Union have pledged themselves not to purchase goods after 7 o'clock Saturday evenings. When we lay to rest through the darkness of old-time systems and deep-rooted prejudices, behind which the enemy is fortressed, we would certainly grow faint-hearted in this great work undertaken by the sisterhood of America, could we not catch glimpses of rosy light breaking over the distant hill-tops, promising the dawn of a brighter and happier day. Winds of adversity and gales of opposition, fierce and strong, may meet us in our onward march, but we must not falter; the goal is bright before us, the height beyond, sublime.

Our trust is in Him who, through winter's storm and biting frost, keeps the promise of spring time bud and summer bloom.

A Seasonable Hint.

During the breaking up of winter, when the air is chilly and the weather damp, such complaints as rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat, croup and other painful effects of sudden cold, are to prevail, it is then that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is found truly valuable as a household remedy. 2w51d

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The ethical influence of distrust fastens its hold on the mind by slow degrees. Little by little it reaches its fatal end and disguises detection successfully under the garb of truth.

Day after day the false conviction grew on Sydney's mind that Herbert Linley was comparing the life he led now with the happier life which he remembered at Mount Morven. Day after day her unreasoning fear contemplated the time when Herbert Linley would leave her friendless in the world that had no place in it for anyone like herself. Delusion—fatal delusion—that looked like truth! Morally weak as he might be, the man whom she feared to trust had not yet entirely lost the spirit which [illegible] half-fitfully fashioned in him—the sense of honor. Acting under that influence, he was (if the expression may be permitted) consistent even in inconsistency. With equal sincerity of feeling he reproached himself for his infidelity toward the woman whom he had deserted and devoted himself to his duty toward the woman whose he had married. In Sydney's presence—suffer as he might under the struggle which was [illegible] the poor girl's fatal position within [illegible] it. It kept his intercourse with her studiously gentle in manner and considerate in language, and it offered to her a future which she could only see through the falsifying medium of her own distrust.

In the delusion that now possessed her she read, over and over again, the letter which Capt. Bennydeck had addressed to his father; she [illegible] and [illegible] clothing, the circumstances which associated her situation with the situation of the poor girl who had closed her wasted life among the nuns in the French convict.

Two results followed on this state of things.

When Herbert asked in what part of England they should go for their honeymoon, she mentioned Sandycoal as a place that she had heard of and felt some curiosity to see. The same day—heard and [illegible] her; cautious where he lived now, at home or abroad—he wrote to engage rooms at the hotel.

A time followed, during which they were obliged to wait until rooms were free. In this interval, brooding over the melancholy absence of friend or relative in whom she could confide, the morbid dread of the future decided her on completing her parallel between herself and that other lost creature of whom she had read. Sydney opened communication anonymously with the Benedictine community at Sandycoal.

She addressed the [illegible] letter, telling the truth about herself, with but one concealment, the concealment of names. She revealed her isolated position among her fellow-creatures; she declared her fervent desire to repent of her wickedness and to lead a religious life; she acknowledged her misfortune in having been brought up by persons careless of religion, and she confessed to having attended a protestant place of worship as a mere matter of form connected with the duties of a teacher at a school. "The religion of any Christian woman who will help me to be more like herself," she wrote, "is the religion to which I am willing and eager to belong. If Heaven in your reply my distress will you receive [illegible]? To this simple appeal she added a request that all answer might be addressed to "S. W., postoffice, Sandycoal."

When Capt. Bennydeck and Sydney Wilkinson passed each other as strangers in the hall of the hotel that [illegible] they [illegible] in London a [illegible].

The servant followed "Mr. and Mrs. Herbert" into their sitting-room and begged that they would be so good as to wait a few minutes while the chambermaid [illegible] prepared for them.

Sydney seated herself in silence. She was thinking of her letter and wondering whether a reply was [illegible] the post-office.

Moving to the window to look at the view, Herbert paused to examine some prints hanging on the walls, which were superior as works of art to the customary decorations of a room at a hotel. If he had gone straight to the window he might have seen his divorced wife, his child, and his wife's mother getting into the carriage which took them to the railway station.

"Come, Sydney," he said, "and look at the sea."

She joined him wearily, with a faint smile. It was a calm, sunny day. Bathing-machines were on the beach, children were playing here and there, and white sails of pleasure boats were visible in the offing. The dullness of Sandycoal wore a quiet, homely aspect which was pleasant to the eyes of strangers. Sydney said, absently: "I think I shall like the place." And Herbert added: "Let us hope that the air will make you stronger." He meant it, and said it kindly—but, instead of looking at her while he spoke, he continued to look at the view. A woman sure of her position would not have allowed this trifling circumstance, even if she had observed it, to disturb her. Sydney thought of the day in London when [illegible] persistently [illegible] the room, and returned in silence to her chair.

Had he been so unfortunate as to offend her? And in what way? An that doubt occurred to Herbert his mind turned to Catherine. She never took offense at trifles; a word of kindness from him, no matter how unimportant it might be, always claimed affectionate acknowledgment in the days when he was living with his wife. In another moment he had [illegible] that remembrance and could [illegible] himself to return to Sydney.

"If you find that Sandycoal confirms your first impression," he said, "let me know it in time, so that I may make arrangements for a longer stay. I have only taken the rooms here for a fortnight."

"Thank you, Herbert; I think a fortnight will be long enough."

"Long enough for you?" he asked.

Her morbid sensitiveness mistook him again; she fancied there was an undertone of irony in his tone.

"Long enough for both of us," she replied.

He drew a chair to her side. "Do you take it for granted," he said, smiling, "that I shall get tired of the place first?"

She shrunk, poor creature, even from his smile. There was the thought, shocking contemptuous in the goodness of it.

"We have been to many places," she reminded him, "and we have got tired of them together."

"Is that my fault?"

"I didn't say [illegible]."

He got up and [illegible]. "I think the journey has a good deal to [illegible]," he resumed. "Would you like to go to your room?"

"I will [illegible] if [illegible] wish it."

He walked [illegible] and caressed her as quietly as ever. "What I really wish," he said, "is that the [illegible] doctor while we were in London. You seem to be very easily irritated of late. I observe a change in you which I willingly attributed to the state of your health——"

She interrupted him. "What change do you mean?"

"It's quite possible I may be mistaken, Sydney. But I have more than once, as I think, seen something in your manner which [illegible] you distrust me."

"I distrust the evil life we are leading," she burst out, "and I see the end of it coming! Oh, I don't blame you. You are kind and considerate, you do your best to [illegible] it, but you have lived long enough with me to regret the woman whom you have lost. You begin to feel the sacrifice you have made, and no wonder. May the word, Herbert, and I release you."

"I will never say the word!"

She hesitated—first inclined, then afraid, to believe him. "I have grace enough left in me," she went on, "to feel the bitterest repentance for the wrong that I have done Mrs. Linley. When it ends, as it must end, in our parting, will you ask your wife——"

Even his patience began to fail him; he repeated firmly, not angrily—to hear more. "She is no longer my wife," he said.

Sydney's bitterness and Sydney's penitence were mingled in a wonderful [illegible] she appealed in a words to [illegible]. "Will you ask me to [illegible] her?" she pleaded.

"After we have been divorced at her petition?" He pointed to the window as he said it. "Look at the sea. If I was drowning out yonder I might as well ask the sea to forgive me."

He produced no effect on her. She ignored the divorce; her passionate remorse asserted itself as obstinately as ever. "Mrs. Linley is a [illegible] woman," she insisted. "Mrs. Linley is a Christian woman."

"I have lost all claim on her—even the claim to remember her virtues," he answered, sternly. "No more of it, Sydney! I am sorry I have disappointed you; I am sorry if you are weary of me."

Her manner changed completely in a moment. "Worship me cruelly as you please," she said, humbly; "I will try to bear it."

"I wouldn't [illegible] you for the world! Why do you persist in distressing me? Why do you feel suspicion of me which I have not deserved?" He stopped and held out his hand. "Don't let us quarrel, Sydney. Which will you do—keep your bad opinion of me or give me a fair trial?"

She loved him so dearly; she was so young, and the [illegible] was so ready to [illegible] she struggled against herself. "Herbert, is it yours pity for me that is speaking now?"

He left her in despair. "It's useless!" he said, sadly. "Nothing will conquer your [illegible]."

She followed him. With a faint cry of entreaty she made him turn to her, and held him in a trembling embrace and rested her head on his bosom. "Forgive me—be patient with me—love me." That was all she could say.

He attempted to calm her agitation by speaking lightly. "At last, Sydney, we are friends again!" he said.

Friends! All the woman in her recoiled from that insufficient word. "Are we lovers?" she whispered.

"Yes!"

Devices of Advertisers.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes becomes shy of the tempting paragraph, fearing the advice that is commended to it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be a cure for a disease at once loathsome to friends, and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer. 6dw52

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for the first [illegible] will [illegible] appearance, will save [illegible], and a long spell of serious illness. Satisfy yourselves [illegible] of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw41tf

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. Making a Record.

Every performance of the Woodward Dramatic Company still further enhances the reputation they are rapidly acquiring for being a first-class theatrical combination, and, though the patronage is not as good as might be wished, the managers faithfully carry out the performances every night. Mr. Woodward, a host in himself, has associated with him a dozen of the most renowned stage celebrities in Canada, while Miss Lindeman, the leading lady, is an actress of unusual ability and vivacity, taking different roles with the greatest of ease and accuracy. Mr. Jenkins, the able manager, knows the public taste to a T, and generate such a bill every night as should satisfy the most exacting. To-night and to-morrow will be the last opportunities the public will have for some time of seeing the Woodward Dramatic Company. To-night at Miss Lindeman's benefit will be presented, "La Belle Russe," which needs no commendation where it is known. Its first presentation in Peterborough is sure to be successful, and will, doubtless, draw a large house. To-morrow at the matinee the play is "British Born;" at night "The Shaughraun." Popular prices—10, 20 and 30 cents.

An Open Letter to Mr. J. W. Flavelle.

To Mr. J. W. Flavelle:

SIR.—In last night's Review, I observe your letter announcing your resignation from the Scott Act Committee. I deeply regret your action. Your zeal in an effort to do good to your fellow men and that at sacrifices which you only know has earned for you the respect and admiration of your fellow citizens. The burden of the enforcement of a law designed to benefit the people, should not rest with volunteers to such an extent as it has upon you. The Government which enacted should also enforce, and not by its indifference and hostile apathy encourage opposition from a large number of the people hostile to it. I cannot blame you for laying down a task too onerous for any individual, a task which in fact should be performed by those who are supported in its performance by the respect rendered to office and authority.

But while admitting your right to resign, deny that the reasons you assign are such as you should put forth as a justification.

You allege that J. R. Stratton has not been in sympathy with the Act—nay, you go further and allege that he has used improper influences to prevent the proper enforcement of the Act. For the sake of argument, admitting all you say, what then?

Mr. Stratton is a supporter of Oliver Mowat's administration—that administration has given this country the best License Law in the world, and, so far as the Government was concerned, that law was fairly enforced.

That Government has fairly met the demands of the temperance people in providing officers and machinery for the enforcement of the Scott Act, and when we consider that governments claim that the administration should only reflect the views of the people, and not be in advance of the people we cannot in justice charge the Mowat Administration with hostility, and candor demands that we admit the Government has made a fair effort to enforce the law, the primary duty of whose enforcement rested not upon the Government at Toronto, but upon that at Ottawa.

Now, Mr. Flavelle, you are an honest man, and I ask you to say candidly, as between the Government and party in power at Ottawa and the Government and party in power at Toronto, which has best done its duty in reference to temperance legislation and administration of temperance law?

The members of your committee, whose action you complain of, are life-long Reformers. Did you expect them to vote for an opponent of Mowat, because Mr. Stratton was neutral on the temperance question?

Did you think that voting for Mr. Carnegie would help the temperance cause? from whom did you expect the best temperance efforts, Mowat or Meredith?

To look simply at the candidate without considering the accord of the party he is allied with, is too small a view to enable one to form a correct judgment as to the manner in which he should exercise his effort towards the government of his country.

The question is, from the past history in Canada and England of both parties, from which may we fairly expect the best temperance legislation? Answer this, and if you say from the Liberals, as in candour you must, then we say to you that he only is consistent (in reference to the temperance question), who uniformly supports the Liberal party, sometimes perhaps voting for a distasteful candidate in order that the party having his confidence may get the power which will enable them to advance the cause he has at heart.

With this view of duty in reference to the exercise of my franchise, I respectfully submit to you that the reasons assigned for your resignation are not tenable, and that a more mature judgment will in time lead you to a like conclusion.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant and admirer,
REFORMER.

Mr. Hull's Explanation.

To the Editor of the Daily Examiner:

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been called to a letter in the Review of Dec. 20th, signed Robert Foger, in which he makes the incorrect charge that I agreed to pay him $12 for the two months he was in gaol for beating the Salvation Army drum. I did agree to pay him his wages while in gaol, rather than pay his fine or see him pay it. After he got out of gaol he left my work without permission and I discharged him, but not without paying him his wages in full, including the time he was in gaol, but I did not pay his father for his board during the time he lay in gaol. As regards the use of my team, Foger got out of gaol in early October, and on July 1st he took my team to go to Peterborough—long before he got in gaol—and he was satisfied with the charge at the time.

I don't blame Foger, but the parties that instigated him to write a misleading letter, and I defy him or the rerve of Lakefield to name a single instance in which I did not carry out an agreement.

Yours truly,
JOHN HULL.

WHY

Will people pay rent when houses and lots can be purchased on such easy terms as are offered by the undersigned, Come and inspect our work and see for yourselves how we can furnish our houses. Our chief aim and study is to build substantial, warm, frost and damp proof houses. I am offering good building lots, and will build solid brick houses, nine-inch walls, stripped and lined, two stories, for less money than you can buy frame or veneered buildings. We cordially invite those who anticipate renting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I've sold gives first-class satisfaction, and I am determined that every house I build shall be a standing testimony to honest building. JOHN CARLISLE, Donegal Street, 2nd block west of St. Andrew's Church. wd

MONDAY, JANUARY 3, 1887.

LEADERS FAR APART.

FAILURE OF THE EFFORTS TO BRING THEM TOGETHER.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Important councils are progressing in the interest of Liberal reunion, Sir William Vernon Harcourt taking the part of chairman and arbitrator. The negotiations are making slow progress, and Chamberlain and Gladstone are still wide apart in spite of all that has been done. Mr. Gladstone stands uncommitted. He has given his sanction to friendly consultation without promising his acceptance or holding out hopes of a concession.

The Parnellites are far from hopeful of a satisfactory outcome of these conferences, for the reason principally that the terms put forward by Chamberlain are inadmissable from the Nationalist standpoint. Chamberlain proposes as the foremost condition of reunion that the Irish land question be taken first, leaving Home Rule to be dealt with separately. His object may not be understood by Liberals generally, but is clear enough to the Parnellites —namely, to postpone Home Rule indefinitely. If, for the sake of Liberal unity the Land Bill should be taken up first, he would saddle it with clauses reserving a control over Irish affairs incompatible with Home Rule and making it impossible to deal with the question of a native Irish Parliament on the only terms the Nationalists could consistently agree to. The Parnellites consequently resist all attempts of Chamberlain or anyone else to take up the land question first. Their policy is to insist on Home Rule coming first, and to this policy they intend to adhere.

A reunion of Chamberlain's followers with the Liberals based on any such conditions as Chamberlain contends for would, while gaining the Chamberlain vote, on the other hand involve the loss of Irish Nationalist support. Gladstone cannot return to power, no matter what combination he and Chamberlain might make, so long as the Tories remain in office, without the eighty-six Parnellite votes. Nor do the Parnellites desire his return to power just yet. They prefer a Tory cabinet at the present juncture, and for some time to come, long enough, at any rate, for the land agitation to bring rents down to a proper level all over Ireland, and until tenants can buy their holdings on reasonable terms. Until these objects are achieved the plan of campaign must continue, no matter which party is in office.

Conference of Nationists.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Mr. Goschen, Lord Hartington, Sir Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Henry James held a long conference to-day. The weight of opinion was in favor of Mr. Goschen's accepting office. Mr. Goschen thereupon waived all personal distaste, and wrote to Lord Salisbury that he would enter his Cabinet under certain conditions. He will hold a conference with Lord Salisbury on Monday.

Mr. Goschen's Appointment.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Post in announcing that Mr. Goschen has agreed to succeed Lord Randolph Churchill in the leadership of the House of Commons, expresses the fear that his appointment will lead to the abandonment of the Tory democratic policy upon which it is necessary to fight the Conservative battle. The Post again urges upon Lord Salisbury the imperative necessity of seeking some means to regain Lord Randolph Churchill, if Mr. Goschen's acceptance be not final.

Harcourt Interviews Goschen.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Sir William Vernon Harcourt and Arnold Morley visited Mr. Goschen to-day. It is rumored that the latter was sent by Mr. Gladstone to advise Mr. Goschen not to leave the Liberal party.

A Jury Commission Asked for.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—Representatives of the Citizens' Association, the Iroquois, Union League and the Commercial Club have agreed upon two bills to be presented during the coming session of the Legislature. One is a "Mob and Riot" Bill, and the other provides for the choosing of jurors by jury commissioners. The jury bill vests the power of appointing three jury commissioners in a majority of judges of each county. Of the first three so chosen, one shall hold his office for one year, one for two years and one for three years. The duties of such commissioners are to compile a list of the legal voters between the ages of 21 and 60 years, and from time to time select the required jurors and grand jurors from such list.

An Experiment in Profit Sharing.

BOSTON, Jan. 1.—The proprietors of the Boston Herald announced to-day to their employes a proposition to give to them for the current year a portion of the net profit of the business, after reserving the interest on the value of the property. The employes are to share in proportion to the wages received during the year. They also suggest to the employes the formation of a mutual benefit society, promising to contribute an amount equal to the aggregate contributions of the employes. The proprietors say in their circular announcing the proposition: "We hope the experiment may be so successful that profit-sharing may be adopted by us as a permanent policy."

Tobogganing on New Year's Day.

The Park and Riverdale slides were in full blast Saturday and hundreds dressed in toboggan attire enjoyed themselves there. At night the slides were illuminated. The festivity at the Park was marred by an accident which shook up a party of ladies and gentlemen but caused serious injury to none of them. The accident happened at the curve, which will be altered and widened to prevent a recurrence of the event. While the alterations are being made the slide will be closed.

Strike of Locomotive Firemen.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 1.—The firemen on the passenger trains on the Adriatic Coast Line system struck to-day for higher wages. They ask $60 per month. The railroad officials refused to accede to the demand. The strike of the firemen does not affect freight traffic, the number of trains run having been increased. No trouble has occurred and none is expected.

IN DURANCE VILE.

THE EXPRESS ROBBERS SURRED OVER TO THE AUTHORITIES.

St. Louis, Jan. 1.—The Adams Express robbers are at last beginning to turn up in this city. This morning Robert A. Pinkerton and Supt. Damsel of the Adams Express Company, having in charge Fred Wittrock, arrived from Kansas City, and Supt. Robertson of the Pinkerton Agency brought the accomplice, Weaver, from Chicago. It was pretty well known that Pinkerton was on his way to this city with Wittrock, and when the train arrived there was a large and curious crowd at the station, anxious to catch a glimpse of the famous Jim Cummings. Mr. Pinkerton aided his prisoner from the car, and followed by Mr. Damsel, they entered a carriage and were driven rapidly to the Four Courts, where the prisoner was delivered over to Jailer Hagmand, who took him in charge, and Jim Cummings was at last placed behind the bars. "Dusk" Robertson also took his prisoner to the Four Courts, where he was given into the custody of the local police and immediately placed in jail. As soon as the prisoners were released from the clutches of the Pinkertons it became possible to obtain interviews with them, but neither had much to say. Wittrock said that he and Haight had planned the robbery, and all the stories about Mrs. Haight having done the headwork was mere talk and nothing more. Fotheringham had known nothing about the contemplated robbery and suspected nothing wrong after he (Wittrock) had entered the car until he was thrown down and disarmed.

After giving over their prisoners to the police, Mr. Pinkerton and "Dusk" Robertson proceeded to the Southern Hotel. The former, while eating his breakfast, talked freely to a reporter about his connection with the case, and said: "We have nearly completed the work now and have turned up the larger part of the money, about $60,000. We have not added up all of our finds, but those figures are pretty nearly correct. There are still $7000 or $8000 out, and we expect to recover the greater part of it. My brother "Billy" and some of our agents are looking that up now so you see the express company are not such heavy losers after all. The major portion of the money was found under Oscar Cook's house. He was an accessory after the fact and if convicted can be made to serve a good term in prison. Mrs. Haight knew nothing of the robbery until after it was done, and she has not even been arrested. Wittrock and Haight did the planning. Weaver weakened at the last moment. He was to ride on the front platform of the express car, and was to give warning of any approaching danger, but he backed out. Wittrock, however, had to put up $3000 to induce him to keep his mouth shut. All of that money has been recovered except a few dollars which he spent."

Oscar Cook was placed under arrest to-day and bound over for a hearing on Monday next, on charges of receiving money and valuables obtained in the Adams Express robbery.

Comstock's New Crusade.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—Anthony Comstock has taken a new departure in his censorship of art and literature. He has just decided that the detective stories of the juvenile papers and cheap "libraries" are hurtful to their youthful readers, and he has given notice to the publishers that he will proceed against them if they do not stop what he regards as their wickedness. His claim is that the depiction of crimes in this class of fiction is immoral, and therefore to be legally excluded from the mails. Two leading houses turning out these detective yarns are seeking to meet the difficulty by carefully revising the pernicious matter and excising the more objectionable passages. In one instance long stretches from Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" are being dovetailed into the New York novels with the slightest feasible alterations of names and places. The calculation is that Comstock will hardly dare to attack Dickens, and that the material thus substituted will serve the purpose of that which is discarded.

A German Steamer Ashore.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1.—The German ship Bertha, which sailed from Hamburg November 11 for Philadelphia, struck to-day abreast of Ocean View, Delaware, and filled with water. She has on board a cargo of empty petroleum barrels and general merchandise consigned to merchants at this port. The ship has twelve feet of water in her hold, and will, if the weather continues bad, break up and become a total loss. The vessel and cargo are valued at over $100,000. The crew were saved by the life-saving crew. Including the iron ship Salamanca, ashore at Rehoboth, and the schooner Ruth Carlisle, ashore at Fenwick's Island shoals, and William Bailey, on the strand at the Delaware breakwater, the value of vessel property bound to this port now ashore and in danger of total loss will foot up to $300,000.

California's Surprising Exhibit.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 2.—The Citrus Fair of Northern and Central California, now running in this city, furnished a number of revelations to fruit men. In the exhibition are watermelons, nuts, dates, oranges, olives, figs, lemons and various kinds of semi-tropical fruits which ripened in the open air in December. The oranges shown are considered equal to any produced in the world. Placer County's display of raisins furnishes a striking illustration of the cause that is driving imported raisins out of the market. Included in the exhibit are ten boxes of raisins similar in appearance. Nine boxes are California raisins. The tenth one is the best imported five crown Dethesa from Spain, and experts are challenged to pick it out.

Railways Blocked By Snow.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 1.—A heavy snow-storm prevailed in the northern and western part of Pennsylvania and in Ohio last night and to-day. Trains from the west were nearly all late arriving here. On the Cleveland and Pittsburg road the snow was a foot deep in some sections on the northern part of the road. Two locomotives had to be attached to the southbound express at Crestline. On the Fort Wayne road there were fifteen inches of snow and the storm was unabated.

New Year's at the South.

CHARLESTON, S.C., Jan. 1.—New Year's Day was celebrated in Charleston by a parade of colored troops of the first brigade National Guard of South Carolina. It was the largest parade held by colored troops in a number of years. The march was through the principal streets and to Hampstead Hill, where the proclamation of emancipation was read. Business was generally suspended.

A Noble Signature.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 1.—An accomplished German architect, under the name of Emil Guenther, married Mrs. Mary H. Murphy last Tuesday. Yesterday he was arrested on a charge of bigamy, it being presumed that he is Count Emil Carl Friedrich Guenthef von Schwarzenberg of Prussia, and his former wife is now on her way here.

Colored People's World Fair.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 1.—A memorial to Congress was forwarded to-day to the Alabama Senators at Washington for an appropriation for the colored people's world fair to be held at Birmingham in the autumn of 1887. The memorial is signed by all classes of white people in the city, including those of every important business interest in the community.

WHAT WILL THE YEAR BRING FORTH

A Prediction of Lively Times in Europe in the Near Future.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegram says: "The prospect for the next twelve months is lively enough. The year about to begin may very well see the collapse of one at least of the great powers and of two or three minor States. The elements of disintegration are not confined to Turkey, and it is a mistake to suppose that in case of war Bulgaria is the only small country whose existence would be imperilled. In Vienna there is considerable anxiety for the immediate future. Everybody feels that the new year opens under unpleasant auspices. A somewhat reassuring item of intelligence comes, however, from Cracow. The Dziennik Polski hears from St. Petersburg that during the recent ministerial council the Czar declared that he would have no war, and actually shook his fist at one of the ministers who had expressed bellicose views. I am inclined to believe there is some foundation for this story. The Czar has lately told different members of his entourage that he wished to avoid war. The aspect of affairs on the Austro-Russian frontier is threatening enough, but it is a good deal worse on the border of France and Germany."

Austria-Hungary's Attitude.

PESTH, Jan. 1.—Herr Tisza, the Hungarian Prime Minister, answering the New Year's congratulations of the Liberal members of the Diet to-day, said that the Government adhered to the Eastern policy himself and Count Kalnoky had already enunciated, and would endeavor by every means to maintain peace, so long as the vital interests and honor of the country were not jeopardised. Notwithstanding that all the States of Europe had been arming since the above mentioned declarations were made, nothing had happened to diminish their hopes of a preservation of peace. On the contrary, the various rulers and their governments showed pacific intentions corresponding to the wishes of their people.

A TRAGIC SLEIGHING PARTY.

A Train Runs Down a Sleigh, Killing two Ladies and Wounding Many.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Jan. 1.—At 8 o'clock this evening the fast express bound east under high speed struck a sled containing twenty young people who were crossing the track of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway, two miles east of this city, en route to a country residence for the purpose of attending a dance. Mrs. Lizzie Lepper, aged 23, and Miss Tina Minecker, aged 17, were instantly killed; Miss Lottie Eix had her right leg broken; Miss Lizzie Kanning, ribs broken; Miss Lena Haight, arm broken; Miss Emma Shuler, leg broken; Miss Gusta Heine, back badly injured; Miss Lizzie Weilke and Miss Belle Bishop badly bruised and suffering from nervous prostration. The party was being driven by Byron Westrumb, who saw the train approaching rapidly and was implored by the gentlemen to stop, but did not heed them. The gentlemen jumped out, but the ladies did not succeed in doing this until too late. The scene just after the accident was heartrending. A relief train was promptly sent to the scene with a corps of surgeons and the dead and wounded properly cared for.

LIBERAL RECORD OF 1886.

A retrospective consideration of the record of the Liberal party for 1886 reveals facts that the Liberal party has great reason to be proud of, and which furnish strong encouragement for renewed exertions for 1887. In Dominion politics the Liberals have been in the cold shades of opposition for the past eight years, and in the Provinces, except, of course, Ontario, ever since Confederation, the influence of Conservatism has been paramount, and the star of Sir John Macdonald has been in the ascendant. He has held power largely by the co-operation of the Provinces and the influences which administrations, in harmony with his own methods, could and did contribute. Now that these aids and influences are largely withdrawn, or cease to exist, his tenure of power is exceedingly precarious. The past year has been marked with a series of unbroken successes for the Liberals. First came the Liberal victories in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Quebec follows with her splendid addition to the record, then Prince Edward Island, Chambly and Halidimand. All these successes are significant of coming victory in the Federal general elections, while the recent victory in Ontario is another note in the minor key, suggestive of the requiem that will be in order in memory of the late Dominion Government at the close of the elections.

MUSIC IN THE SCHOOLS.

At the recent meeting of the Ontario Musical Society, a resolution was adopted in favor of making the teaching of vocal music a part of the regular curriculum of our public schools. It must be admitted that, so far as its beneficial effect on the pupils is concerned, it would be a step in the right direction. Whether it is practicable, is a matter for maturer consideration. If, as Shakespeare asserts, "music has power to soothe the savage breast," it would not be amiss to try its effect in subduing the spirit of mischief, insubordination and rudeness that is so large a part of every schoolboy's nature. The subduing and refining influence of music is conceded—a boy in whom singing or whistling is constitutional, is not, in the very nature of things, a bad boy, and if all our boys can be made musical, the necessarily consequent descriptarian improvement in the management of our public schools, and the consequent improvement in lessons and learning would advance pari passu with musical development and culture. Will our local educationists consider the practical aspect of the subject?

THE Mail denies, with suspicious emphasis, the rumor that there is to be an immediate dissolution of the Dominion Parliament. What, then, has been the significance of the recent starring tour of the Premier and his principal ministers through Ontario? Did they come amongst us to strengthen Mr. Meredith's weak hands? And now Ministers Costigan, Thompson, Foster and other Federal ministers have departed from the capital to stump the Maritime Provinces. Would all this ministerial eloquence be wasted if the elections were not imminent?

THE debt of the city of Toronto has increased two and a quarter million dollars in the ten years from 1876 to 1886. The total debt is now $7,460,833. Toronto's debt seems to keep pace with the marvellous growth in other respects claimed for her by her enthusiastic citizens. In the ten years from '76 to '86, the population of Toronto has increased from 70,000 to 140,000, her assessment has increased from forty-one millions to eighty-three millions, and the amount of property exempt for taxation has risen in ten years from eight and a half millions to nearly twelve millions.

ONE fact among many others, indicating that a general Dominion election is not far distant, is the fact that members of the Cabinet are getting all their relatives into warm places previous to the coming cold day. Minister Costigan has appointed his son Collector of Inland Revenue at Windsor, though there are scores of other civil service employees who have superior claims to promotion.

THE Dominion Government has been repulsed in another attack upon Provincial rights. Judge Henry, of the Exchequer Court, has decided that the Federal authorities had no right to bestow the lands in the "railway belt" in British Columbia upon the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Smythekins is trying to arouse the courage of his better half, who has recently lost her pet parrot and is overcome with grief: "Come come! What the dence. Be a man, my dear! Suppose you had lost me!"—New York Mail.

Second husband (to wife)—"Are you as fond of me as you were of your first husband, dear?" "Wife—"Yes, indeed; and if you were to die, John, I would be just as fond of my third. I'm not a woman to marry for anything but love."

Customer (in restaurant)—"Here, waiter, a sirloin steak, well done. I'm in a big hurry." Waiter—"Is yo' in a hurry?" Customer.—"Yes, yes." Waiter—"Den why not take dat steak rare 'stead o' well done if yo' is in a hurry, boss?"

Some of our exchanges are describing elaborately how to decorate milking-stools with hand-painted plush and ribbons. And yet farmers complain that too little space is devoted to their interests in the columns of the press.—Burlington Free Press.

"The simple throat bow, without ends, which is the proper finish for the short bonnet-strings of the season," says a fashion exchange, "does not interfere with the workings of the chin." Husbands will read this item with profound regret.—Burlington Free Press.

A small Harrow boy, being asked by his parents at a cricket match whether a youth named Cobden, who was making a splendid score, was "any relative to the great Cobden," replied, all unconscious of the exploits of the free-trade champion, "He is the great Cobden."

"All is over between George and myself," said Clara, as she sank wearily into a chair; "I cannot trust my future happiness to such a man. I shall write him at once that we must part." "What is the trouble?" "I met him in the street today, and he wore earmuffs."—New York Sun.

A few days ago two men were in Smith's barber-shop. One had red hair and the other was baldheaded. Red hair to baldhead: "You were not around when they were giving out hair?" Baldhead: "Yes, I was there; but they only had a little red hair left and I wouldn't take it."—Bowersville (Ga.) Union.

A man walked into a third-rate downtown saloon the other day and, calling for whisky, poured out a brimming tumblerful. "You must like it," sarcastically remarked the proprietor. "Well, I wouldn't drink so much water to get a little if I didn't" was the crushing reply.—Wilmington Star.

"Ah!" remarked a young rat, as the steel trap closed on his leg, "I was afraid we would have a cold snap before morning." "True," said a wise cat, who happened along, "and we may now look for considerable activity in the fur market." And, sure enough, the fur began to fly at once.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The boys in the Chinese Mission School usually prefer women teachers, perhaps because these are more sympathetic and patient with them; and there is a good story of one who, in the absence of his own teacher, was put under the instruction of a man. He seemed uneasy and unhappy, and when asked how the lesson had gone burst out with: "Me no likee man teacher! Me want old gal!"—Boston Record.

A Maryland fisherman tells an expansive story of his experience with a sturgeon he hooked in the Pokomoke. He called upon a friend to assist him in getting the fish into the boat, but the friend, being afraid of it, left him to manage as best he could. Being afraid of losing his prize, he sprang upon the back of the fish, caught it by the gills to keep its head out of the water, and with kicks and yells rode it ashore.

There is some controversy going on as to the word "toboggan." Several authorities claim that it is from the Indian. A prominent Utican of Celtic extraction, however, insists that it is an Irish word, and he gets at its origin thus: Once upon a time a poor farmer in County Cork discovered a valuable peat bed on the few acres he happened to own. His fortune was soon made, for he left the farming "side" and went back to boggin'.—Utica Herald.

"Pa," said Olivia, "we ought to have a thermometer in the house. We don't ——" "There now," shouted the old man with the air of one who closes the discussion, "I don't want to hear another word about it. If ye had one ye couldn't talk through it. Lem Haskins had one put in his house nigh a month ago, an' he's hollered himself hoarse an' they've nigh about starved to death, tryin' to order their groceries through it. No good, I tell ye."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"Prof." Dale of Binghamton, N. Y., recently "broke the world's record" by swinging Indian clubs four hours and fifty minutes. A young man in this town swung Indian clubs in his mother's parlor a few days ago, and, although he didn't break the world's record, he broke nearly everything else in the room, including the chandelier, mantel ornaments, two plaques, a statuette of Minerva, his own head, and one of the commandments. If the world's record had been within reach of his clubs he would have broken that too.—Norristown Herald.

Pete Wilson, an old railroad engineer, is known as a great blowhard. "I tell you when a man has been on the railroad as much as I have been he don't know what fear is. I used to be scared of a locomotive, but I've got over all that," he said to a crowd of listeners in front of a livery-stable. "You wouldn't get in front of a locomotive, would you?" asked Gilhooly. "Would I? Well, I should snicker. I'd lay right down in front of a locomotive and smoke my pipe as calm as a summer morn, but of course not if there was fire under the boiler. I'm no darned fool even if I am a reckless darn-devil."—Texas Siftings.

A Western member of Congress who went home for a vacation telegraphed his coming to certain friends, and as he rolled into town his ear was on the strain to catch the first notes of the expected brass band. The notes came, but they were a mile away. He looked for the crowd, but there was none. Going up the street he met one of the friends who must have received his word, and hotly demanded: "What sort of a way is this to receive your member of Congress?" "My dear sir, it is very unfortunate, but none of your friends are to blame. A champion female roller-skater struck the town this morning, and no Congressman will amount to a pound of putty until her engagement expires. The band, all of the Common Council, and all the county officials are now escorting her to the rink, and the boys are crying, 'Our Congressman be ——!'"—New York Star.

Another lively child has been heard from. This one is dangerous, however. She has upset the peace of a household. She has estranged her father and mother. She has ruined the reputation of a most estimable young school-teacher, and she will probably never know anything about it. It was in school. The school-teacher, wishing to test the intelligence of her little pupils, asked them: "How many of you know that my name is Daisy?" They were silent. Perhaps their intuition told them that to acknowledge the fact would be to exhibit undue familiarity. At last one little thing held up her hand. "I know your name's Daisy." Having made this bold statement she felt she must save herself by an explanation. "I know your name's Daisy, 'cos every day when I go home papa asks me, 'How's that daisy school-teacher of yours?'"—San Francisco Chronicle.

An electric boy has been on exhibition in Edinburg, and a gentleman who writes to the Electrician says he made such a thorough examination of the case as to satisfy him that there was no deception. He was a colored boy. The writer says: "I had the boy stripped naked. While thus naked he walked in my presence, and also sat on a wooden seat with his feet off the ground. In every position in which I tried him I found electricity proceeded freely from his body when I touched it with one finger. The electricity came with the greatest freedom from the upper half of his body, and especially from his tongue."

George H. Boker, who for so many years was president of the two leading clubs in Philadelphia and the central figure in nearly every large social entertainment, is now hardly seen at all. He seems to have retired temporarily from society and goes nowhere. He is famous as having been held up as "the only literary man in Philadelphia." This reputation he is now upholding, it appears, by writing a new play, which, it is said, will be the greatest achievement of his life. He is at work upon it continuously, and he devotes to it almost all of his time. It is whispered that, as in his "Book of the Dead," some social celebrities will be freely satirised and excoriated.

M. Pasteur is not one who dislikes dogs, and there are three pets of the kind that play about his private house. Nevertheless, he must feel that the genus is against him, and doubtless he repeats old King Lear's lines:

"The little dogs and all,
Tray, Blanche and Sweetheart, see, they bark at me."

It is said that the Japanese gentleman never intrusts the making of the tea to his servants on company occasions, but performs that operation himself. The teapot and cups he uses are of a diminutive size, and he makes the beverage by pouring hot water upon the tea leaves. The water hardly touches the leaves before he begins pouring off a stream of pale straw-colored tea as delicate and fragrant as rose leaves.

"Better die soon, Than live on lingeringly in pain." Better be neither, but get and take medicine that will relieve pain which is only an evidence of disease, and thus you may live on in health and happiness. If you have a cold or cough, weak or sore lungs, consumption, chronic nasal catarrh, bronchitis, impure blood or liver disease, take Dr. Pierces "Golden Medical Discovery" a certain cure for these diseases. Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain in the same size. eodw41

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-less trusses made in York State, costing me $16. Nothing would retain my hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. H. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child born; and 90 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

A Good Appointment.

The public will be interested in knowing that Mr. Harry Rush has been appointed agent of the Confederation Life Association, for the town and the surrounding places, included in the Peterborough agency. The Association is to be congratulated upon securing a gentleman as agent, so well qualified in every way for the duties of the position. Mr. Rush is thoroughly experienced business man, and, as an old resident, acquainted with almost everybody, and with a personal popularity, as a genial obliging square-dealing man, which at once places him in the position of making his services immediately available to the Association. Mr. Rush will doubtless prove a most efficient and satisfactory agent of a well-established and safe Life Assurance Corporation, and the EXAMINER can cordially join in congratulations to both Mr. Rush and the Company.

E. E. Henderson, Esq., Peterborough, Ont.:

DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in thanking you for your services during the past year, and wishing you a happy and prosperous future in the one that is about to commence.

Mr. Kelly moved, seconded by Mr. McNeil, that the communication of Mr. E. B. Edwards to a previous meeting of the council be referred to the Finance Committee for reconsideration.—Carried.

CRESCENT STREET.

Mr. Cahill moved, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that whereas Crescent street is being continuously washed away by the water of Little Lake, and whereas the said lake has been filled by the sawdust and mill refuse deposited in the waters tributary to said lake for the past forty years, which has led to the washing away of said street, and whereas the late Government Engineer of the Trent Valley Works, claimed during his lifetime that said Crescent street is a reserve for a highway; and whereas the Dominion Government have made grants from time to time to clear the lake of the mill refuse, deposited therein as set forth above, this Council is of opinion that such grants would be more advantageously employed if a dredge were used for the purpose of filling up said street, in which work this Council is willing to assist; be it therefore resolved that the Town Solicitor have prepared a memorial to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, setting forth the above facts in full, and praying that a grant be made for the purpose set forth above.—Carried

Mr. CAHILL moved, seconded by Mr. McNaughton, that this Council hereby approve of any steps the commissioners of the Town Trust may take in disposing of or acquiring lands in the south reserve.—Carried.

A MARK OF RESPECT.

Mr. Davidson moved, seconded by Mr. McNaughton, that this Council regret to learn of the death of their street inspector, the late Alexander Wilson, who, during the time he occupied the position, was a faithful and efficient servant; and that, as a mark of respect to deceased, we do now adjourn, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and that this Council do now attend the funeral of the deceased in their corporate capacity.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till Monday, Jan. 10th.

The "Kist o Whistles."

The new organ for the George street Methodist Church arrived at the C. P. R. station Friday last, and is being conveyed in pieces to the church. It was manufactured by Edward Lye & Sons, Toronto, and is in charge of a junior member of the firm, who, with a staff of workmen, will begin the erection of the organ at once. It is estimated about ten days will be required for this operation. This organ is the largest in town, having 2 more pipes than any other, and being 24 feet wide by 27 feet 6 inches in height, reaching within 3½ feet of the highest part of the ceiling. It is Gothic in style, and will cost about $3,000, all told. The organ will probably be ready for use by Sunday, 16th inst. A fine programme is in preparation for the organ recital, which will take place at the formal opening of the "Kist o' Whistles."

The Dreaded Diphtheria

A Remedy That is Said to be Simple to Try and Successful.

The presence of several cases of diphtheria in town makes it incumbent upon everyone to use extra precautions in guarding against the approach and spread of the dread disease. The following simple remedy is going the rounds of the press:

R. Munch, proprietor of a drug establishment in Leipsig, Saxony, publishes in the Pharmacist, a medical paper, a remedy for diphtheria which has had surprising success. He urgently presses all physicians to try it for the benefit of all patients suffering from the disease, and also requests the press to publish it. He says: My little daughter, seven years of age, has had diphtheria twice within some weeks, with severe fever, about 105 degrees. We gave, with success, rectified oil of turpentine (oleum terebinth æ rectificatum). Dose, one teaspoonful in the morning and the same at evening. Adults should take one teaspoonful. Afterwards drink a little lukewarm milk to allay the burning in throat. For children the second dose can be mixed with milk which will render it easier to take. The result is really marvellous. The inflammation of the abnormal diptheric spots in the throat grow lighter at the edges, and in this way they gradually shrink until in twenty-four hours they disappear entirely, leaving no sign. To quiet the inflamed tonsils the throat was gargled at first every two hours, with the following gargle: One ounce chlorate of potash to four ounces distilled water. This remedy has been used with perfect satisfaction both by adults and children, not one case ending fatally. The Milwaukee Volksblatt quoted this remedy from the German paper, and afterwards received a letter from a subscriber in Mitchell county, Iowa, saying that 'a child in the writer's family was attacked by diptheria, treated by local physicians and died; then four members of the same family were similarly attacked, treated by this remedy, and, I am happy to tell you all recovered.'

New Year Races.

The Driving Park was opened New Year's day by a trotting race, which resulted as follows: 1st, Luudy's mare; 2nd, Morgan's; 3rd, Newhall's; 4th, Fanny B., (Daly's). The race was for a purse of $50. Mr. Newhall has leased the park for the winter, and has undertaken to keep the track in tip top order, so that all persons holding season tickets may speed their horses, and thus avoid fast driving on our streets. Season tickets only $1.50 each, to be had at the City Hotel.

Hazel Brae Home.

The managers of Hazel Brae take this opportunity of acknowledging with best thanks the following contributions, received during the past fortnight, for the benefit of the children of the Barnardo Home:—Mrs. G. A. Cox, $10.00 and box of oranges; Mrs. Wm. Davidson, 3 large cakes, etc.; Mrs. Fielding, New Elmboro', $5.00; Mrs. Gen. Haultain, books and toys for Christmas tree; Mrs. Dr. Halliday, toys and six dozen bags of candies; Mrs. J. Stratton, a turkey; Mrs. A. T. Thompson, Iroquois, $2.00; Misses Tovell and Smith, Paris, box of toys; Mrs. Rubidge, nuts, oranges, etc; Mrs. Capt. Wallis, beef, vegetables, six dozen tarts, candies and Christmas tree: Mrs. Judge Weller, oranges; Mr. John Braden, dried fruit and candies; Mr. A. B. Douglas, Rochester $4.00; Mr. T. W. Robinson, a turkey, oranges and dried fruits; Mr Wm. Stock, a cake and currant bread; Mr. Robt. Wainwright, a turkey and a goose; Master B. Tovell, Paris, $2.50, contents of savings box.

Children's Chorus Festival Encore.

The Choral Festival will be repeated by request on Thursday, the 6th, after which the gifts will be distributed to the children from the Christmas trees by Santa Claus in person. Those ladies who have kindly offered to assist in the children's entertainment at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, in the Concert hall, will please send their donations to the Opera house on Thursday morning next, so as to have things in readiness for the children. Nearly 500 children will participate in the concert. It is hoped that the friends of the children will fill the house. There will be a rehearsal on Wednesday afternoon at the Concert hall at 3 o'clock. All the children are requested to be present, as fresh tickets will be given out to the children taking part in the concert. This plan becomes necessary, as many of the children had their old tickets stolen from them. Children must remember that no child may come to the entertainment who has not received a ticket. Mr. Seward will feel very grateful if the ladies of the different congregations throughout the town will all unite in the matter of furnishing refreshments for the children. Tickets on sale at A. L. Davis & Co's Bookstore.

Harper's Young People.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

Harper's Young People has been called "the model of what a periodical for young readers ought to be," and the justice of this comparison is amply sustained by the large circulation it has attained both at home and in Great Britain. This success has been reached by methods that must commend themselves to the judgment of parents no less than to the tastes of children—namely, by an earnest and well-sustained effort to provide the best and most attractive reading for young people at a low price. The illustrations are copious and of a conspicuously high standard of excellence.

An epitome of everything that is attractive and desirable in juvenile literature.—Boston Courier.

A weekly feast of good things to the boys and girls in every family which it visits.—Brooklyn Union.

Will people pay rent when houses and lots can be purchased on such easy terms as are offered by the undersigned. Come and inspect our work and see for yourselves how we construct our houses. Our best aim and study is to build substantial, warm, frost and damp proof houses. I am offering good building lots and will build solid brick houses, also such walls, stripped and to let, two stories, for less money than you can buy frame or veneered buildings. We cordially invite those who anticipate renting or buying to inspect our work and prove for themselves that our houses are not merely built to sell. Every house I build shall be a standing testimony to honest building. JOHN OARLISLE, Hospital Street, the block west of St. Andrew's Church. wd

RUSSIA'S ALLIANCE

GERMANY THROWS HER FRIENDSHIP FOR AUSTRIA OVERBOARD.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—M. Blowitz, Paris correspondent of the Times, positively confirms his recent statement that Russia and Germany have concluded a direct alliance. Dr. Blowitz says that by the terms of this alliance Russia binds herself to remain neutral in the event of war between France and Germany, and Germany binds herself to remain neutral in the event of war between Russia and Austria. He further says that while there can be no doubt about the existence of this imperial compact there are two stories as to the manner in which the treaty was effected. One is that it was negotiated directly by the Czar and the Emperor William through personal correspondence and the other is that Bismarck and M. De Giers contrived the alliance by personal discussion.

THE BULGARIAN CRISIS.

Alexander's Return Would be the Signal for Russian Occupation.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 3.—It is semi-officially stated that the Russian Government maintains the same attitude toward Bulgaria it adopted at the time General Kaulbars' recall from that country.

The return of Prince Alexander to the Bulgarian throne, it is added, might, however, cause the Czar to renounce all endeavors to effect a pacific settlement of the crisis in Bulgaria and have recourse to military occupation of the country.

Russia Effects a Loan.

PARIS, Jan. 3.—Russia has concluded arrangements for obtaining from the Hersents of Paris a loan of 75,000,000 francs. The money is to be expended in constructing a canal from the eastern extremity of the Gulf of Perekop, in the Black Sea, across the neck of land joining the Crimea to the mainland, to the sea of Azov, in order to afford a direct water route from the River Don to the Black Sea.

Seventeen of the Crew Were Drowned.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The British steamer Dragoman, which collided with and sunk a ship off Bardsey was from Liverpool for Cardiff. She returned to the Mersey after the collision. Her bows are stove in and she is otherwise seriously damaged. The name of the sunken ship was the Duke of Connaught. She had a crew of twenty-one men, and seventeen of these were drowned.

Libellers of the Czar.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 3.—The Journal de St. Petersburg denies the stories that the Czar is insane and characterizes as falsehoods the several actions attributed to the Czar and referred to as illustrating the nature of his malady. The Journal denounces the Prether Lloyd newspaper of Pesth for publishing "such absurdities, which," the St. Petersburg paper adds, "are hatched by foreign manufactories of lies."

Nine Mexicans Were Burned to Death.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 3.—The officials of the Southern Pacific Railroad to-day announced the details of the disastrous accident on their Rio on Friday night. They corroborate the accounts previously sent. Nine Mexicans were burned to death in the wreckage of the two trains. They were on a flat car which was driven under the cars of a freight train and the wreck took fire.

Four Killed and Thirteen Wounded.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—An explosion of gas occurred yesterday in the Cambridge barracks at Portsmouth, doing considerable damage. Four men were killed, and others are still buried in the debris. It is not known whether they are alive or not. The number of injured, as far as known, is thirteen, and some of these, it is feared, are fatally hurt.

Favoring Home Manufacture.

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—German iron masters have made an agreement with those of Belgium to refrain from selling rails to each other's country. Iron masters of those countries are endeavoring to induce English manufacturers of rails to enter into a similar agreement.

A Regent Where Least Expected.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Dublin Express of yesterday asserts that Archbishop Walsh is being hypnotized by the Catholics of the upper classes because he supports the Nationalist plan of campaign.

Anniversary of a Consecration.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 3.—Impressive ceremonies were held this morning in St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of the Right Reverend W. Bacon Stevens, LL.D., Bishop of the diocese of Pennsylvania.

Married Pegasy Gentleman.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 3.—Eunice Hill, the pretty and accomplished daughter of Mr. Hill of Redding, eloped with and has been married to Fred Hicks, her father's coachman. Miss is 20 years old and unattractive. Mr. Hicks is 26 years old and unattractive. The lady is 10. Mr. Hill refuses to recognize either of them.

The Northwest Cold Wave.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—The cold wave throughout the Northwest continues in many points. The cold is more severe than yesterday. No further delay or interruption of railway traffic

[illegible]

GOSCHEN'S OFFICE

HE WILL PROBABLY LEAD THE GOVERNMENT IN THE COMMONS.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Times says Goschen was reluctant to accept office, but was strongly advised to do so by Lord Hartington. It is expected that Goschen will meet Salisbury to-day and finally settle with him the terms on which he will enter the Cabinet. He will join the Ministry on the understanding that he does so as a Liberal and that his object is to strengthen the Unionist cause. He desires to be satisfied that he is in agreement with the Government on all important foreign and domestic questions. Goschen has not been offered the leadership of the Government in the Commons, but that will naturally revert to him after the present lead of W. H. Smith. Salisbury has assured Hartington he is trying with some hope of success to overcome the reluctance of Conservatives to accept Hartington as the Prime Minister. Referring to Chamberlain the Times says: "While that gentleman regards himself as perfectly loyal to Hartington he has undoubtedly made overtures to the Gladstonian party for a re-union."

Chamberlain and Parnell.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Mr. Chamberlain, in answer to requests that he explain the Parnell letter incident, declares that it was not he, but Mr. Parnell who initiated the National Council scheme and that Parnell now admits its authorship. Chamberlain promises to produce at the proper time letters proving his assertions.

JUMPED OFF SUSPENSION BRIDGE.

An Unknown Man Ends His Life by Stepping Into the Niagara Rapids.

NIAGARA FALLS, Jan. 3.—While Mr. Joseph Cottringer, Pullman car conductor, was crossing the railway suspension bridge, at about 5.30 this evening, he noticed a man dressed in a dark suit, with an overcoat, step up on the foot passenger walk from the carriage drive, about the centre of the bridge, about fifteen yards in front of him, and climb through the iron braces and uprights on the whirlpool side of the bridge and leap off the bridge into the river, a fall of 196 feet. Mr. Cottringer rushed up to prevent him, but could see nothing of the man on account of it being dusk, but plainly heard the splash as the unfortunate man struck the water. No clue to his identity can be found, and it is altogether likely never will, as the bodies of suicides from this point are never found.

Fatal Accident at Burlington.

BURLINGTON, Jan. 3.—Donald McQuarrie, late Reeve of Caledonia, was instantly killed this morning. He and his son went down to start his grist mill. The son then went back to the house, and on returning about fifteen minutes later found his father a corpse, and it is evident from the position in which he was found that he was coming up the stairs leading from the engine room, and it being dark he missed his footing and fell backward on the driving pulley. The sad affair has cast a deep gloom over the whole community. The deceased was highly respected, and his loss will be deeply felt by the whole village and surrounding country.

Evangelizing in Female Attire.

HALIFAX, Jan. 3.—A man dressed in woman's clothing and calling himself Miss Foster, has been holding evangelistic services in some of the districts along the north shore of New Brunswick. He held meetings in Blackville, where his methods and religious fervor were so feminine that he was not detected. At the Travers school-house, on the Little Southwest, a few days ago he started a series of meetings, but his enthusiasm and skirts could never cover up his masculinity from the penetration of the Little So'westers. He was exposed at a meeting and forced to decamp without explaining his reason for adopting petticoats.

Hamilton Items.

HAMILTON, Jan. 3.—Merchandise to the value of $63,370.27 was exported to the United States, from the consular district of Hamilton, during the month of December, 1886. The shipments consisted mainly of barley, malt, wool and skins.

Rev. J. W. A. Stewart, pastor of James-street Baptist Church, may accept a call to the First Baptist Church, Rochester. The Rochester people are determined to secure him if possible, and have sent a strong delegation to confer with him.

Wreck of a British Bark.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The British bark Lotus from Fowey, England, for New York with a cargo of China clay, ran ashore at Long Beach this morning. Her captain and crew of seven men were rescued by the life saving crew at Cape Lewis and the sailors suffered terribly, being scarcely able to leave the vessel with the aid of the life saving crew. The captain is badly frost-bitten. The vessel is covered with ice, is full of water and is fast breaking up.

Almost Suffocated by Gas.

MONTREAL, Jan. 3.—Mrs. Campbell, who with her son and daughter and a boarder named Kavanagh resided at 31 Dowd-street, were nearly suffocated by gas which escaped from the main on the street and found its way through the sewer to the house. Medical assistance was procured, and all have recovered with the exception of Mrs. Campbell, who is very weak, but doing well.

A Cold Night at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Jan. 3.—Last night was the coldest of the present winter, the thermometer going as low as 38 degrees below zero.

HOME AND FOREIGN.

The snow fall in Montreal for Saturday and Sunday was six inches.

The Governor-General's New Year's Day reception was attended by about five hundred persons.

Mrs. Samuel Colter, living near Stratford, died last week, aged 104. She was born in Ireland in 1783.

Mr. Dennis McCarthy, an old and respected citizen of London, died suddenly in that city on Saturday, aged 80.

It is believed in Winnipeg that the Local Government still have some intention of offering the speakership of the next Legislature to Mr. David Glass.

A fresh detachment of the Salvation Army consisting of two men and two women, arrived at Quebec on Saturday and commenced services on Sunday.

A man, whose name is unknown, died suddenly Saturday in Gauthier's saloon, St. Lawrence-street, Montreal. Death is supposed to have resulted from over-drinking.

About forty artillerists, members of various volunteer batteries in the province, have arrived at Kingston to take a short course at the School of Gunnery.

Joseph E. McCabe, son of John McCabe of Moonside, Middlesex County, has entered action against Lyman Wright of that place, claiming heavy damages for defamation of character.

A carter named Thos. Britz, aged 28 years, and residing at 35 Canning-street, Montreal, took suddenly ill on Magill-street on Sunday. He was being driven to his home, but died before reaching there.

A man employed by Hiram Walker & Sons at Walkerville, met with a peculiar accident on Saturday. In entering a stall to take out his horse he struck his face against a stray frozen blanket, resulting a deep gash over his eye, lacerating the eyelid and narrowly escaping the loss of the eye.

Owing to the prevalence of glanders among horses in Montreal and the outlying districts, the City Board of Health have requested the Provincial Government to pass an order-in-Council bringing into force the Act giving the Government Veterinary Inspector power to have the infected animals destroyed.

THE RECORD FOR A GENERATION.

The Great Growth of Cereal Production in Thirty-Three Years.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The report of the Senate Committee on Transportation, Routes, etc., has been published. It makes a volume of 800 pages, and contains many valuable tables and much information on the subject of transportation, gathered from nearly every country in the world. The first table presented indicates the progress of the United States for a generation. Thirty-three years ago they produced 100,000,000 bushels of wheat and about 600,000,000 bushels of corn. Twice in recent years they have reached 500,000,000 bushels of wheat, and in 1885 the corn crop reached 1,800,000,000 bushels, a five-fold increase in wheat and a three-fold increase in corn. The increase in other cereals has not been so rapid. In the export trade, the committee says, wheat has always ranked first in value, and in 56 years has added $2,000,000,000 to the value of the national production, a sum equivalent to four times the value of exported corn and cornmeal during the same period. It is shown that the difference in the price of corn between the Atlantic ports and the lake ports has steadily declined from 21 cents per bushel in 1873 to 10 cents per bushel in 1883, and between the Atlantic ports and the western river boats from 19 cents in 1873 to 11 cents in 1883.

SIX HUNDRED MEN ON STRIKE.

The Employes of a Coal Railway Resist a Reduction of Wages.

JERSEY CITY, N.J., Jan. 3.—The trimmers, foremen, laborers and brakemen to the number of 600, employed on the Port Johnson Coal Docks at Bayonne, struck to-day against a reduction of wages. The companies affected by the strike are the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company and E. B. Eley's Company. Anticipating trouble the companies attempted to have the boats towed to South Amboy for loading, but the captains refused to proceed further than Elizabethport unless they were paid $60 per month. They have been receiving $30 per month.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Jan. 3.—Orders were received here to-night from the superintendent of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company to shut down all collieries shipping coal over the Central Railroad of New Jersey, on account of the strike at Port Johnson. Over 1000 men and boys will be thrown out of work.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

Combinations to Corner Articles of Food Are Unlawful.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Jas. R. Keene and N. G. Miller in 1880 formed a pool to advance the price of lard. It is said a small fortune was realized. The members of the pool, however, charged that their brokers had defrauded them by making fictitious purchase and sales. Keene sued the brokers in the Supreme Court to recover his share of the profits, and the brokers interposed a defense that the transactions were gambling and that the law could not force them to account. Judge Daniels of the general term of the Supreme Court has decided that this defence is valid and that the law does not sanction that form of gambling. He holds that combinations to keep articles of food or other necessities of the market with the view of getting a higher price for it are unlawful conspiracies, punishable as a crime.

The Canadian Pacific's Telegraph Line.

MONTREAL, Jan. 3.—The Pacific Postal Telegraph Company's extension from New Westminster, B.C., to San Francisco has been watched with the greatest interest by the press upon the Pacific coast. Scarcely a day has gone by but that the papers have announced some new phase in connection with the construction of the lines. The company has been met at every turn with the most determined opposition from the Western Union Company and the Northern Pacific and other railway companies, but notwithstanding a dozen or more injunctions the work has been pushed steadily forward, until now the lines of the company are nearly completed and are expected to be opened up to the public some time during this month. The Canadian Pacific Company's telegraph office at Montreal will then virtually be "the hub" of the telegraph universe, for here all telegraphs to and from San Francisco and New York, Europe, Asia, etc., will have to be repeated.

The Proper English Walk.

From the Washington Star.

Something new appeared in New York a short time ago, but though it is English, and has apparently come to stay, it has not met with a fervid reception. It is the lurching English walk. Perhaps the most proficient of its votaries is a Londoner named Benson, who came here with a lot of letters recently, and has spent all his time since in dashing up and down the steps of Fifth avenue residences, leaving vast quantities of cards with the citizens of New York. His manner of walking was recognized at once as distinctly the thing in London this year, and club men and anglomaniacs lay in wait along Fifth avenue to see him pass by. Of all the walks this is the most absurd. To begin, in good form, the knees must never be straightened under any circumstances, and the toes should be turned out as far as possible without putting the heels in advance of them. This gives a rather parenthetical look to the legs from the front elevation, but it is indubitably correct, nevertheless. Having assumed this posture, the walker should lean his body forward from the hips, draw his shoulders over in front, elevate the chin as far as possible, and then start off with the arms hanging straight at the side. Bend the knees outward at every step and move as rapidly as possible. Repeat as before, and then rest eight minutes in a horizontal position. Altogether the walk is not unlike that affected by variety actors mimicking old plantation darkies, and I am told that if a man hums gently some such strain as "Climbing up the Golden Stairs" while perfecting himself in the minor details of the walk he will be vastly aided thereby.

Cause for Thanks.

From Harper's Magazine.

"A Country Parson," [illegible] encountering a storm the past season in the voyage across the Atlantic, was reminded of the following: A clergyman was so unfortunate as to be caught in a severe gale in the voyage out. The water was exceedingly rough, and the ship persistently buried her nose in the sea. The rolling was constant, and at last the good man got thoroughly frightened. He believed they were destined for a watery grave. He asked the captain if he could not have prayers. The captain took him by the arm and led him down to the forecastle, where the tars were singing and swearing. "There," said he, "when you hear them swearing you may know there is no danger." He went back feeling better; but the storm increased his alarm. Disconsolate and unassisted he managed to stagger to the forecastle again. The ancient mariners were swearing as ever. "Mary," he said to his sympathetic wife, as he crawled into his berth after tacking across a wet deck, "Mary, thank God they're swearing yet."

TUESDAY, JANUARY 4, 1887.

THE BRITISH SITUATION.

The Conservatives of Great Britain were exceedingly anxious for office. Since they got the Treasury benches they have not had a weeks' smooth sailing. Now they are in a most precious pickle. Lord Randolph Churchill's retirement from the Cabinet and from the leadership of the Tory party in the House of Commons, has reduced the ministry to sore straits. Lord Salisbury has tried in vain to patch up a reconciliation with the fiery young seceder and his attempts to induce Lord Hartington and other Liberal Unionists to come to the rescue has been made with equal ill success. Lord Randolph Churchill, fiery and flighty as he was, had the bulk of the brains and executive ability of the cabinet, and was the strongest cohesive element in the combination. His defection leaves only a few persons of mediocre talents to stand by Lord Salisbury in the present crisis, and the latter never needed brains at his back more than he will at the coming session of Parliament. The Irish question, bristling with all sorts of difficulties, will come up for settlement, and the Salisbury Government may thank themselves if their retrograde policy of coercion has increased the difficulties of the situation. The last general elections resulted in a practical approval of the principle of a measure of self-government for Ireland, only the question of details defeating Mr. Gladstone, and the prospects of the Tory party in the event of another general election, which the cunningest coalition or temporary pact cannot long postpone, will be gloomy enough.

Is the N. P. losing its savour? In spite of its protecting aegis, Canada still continues to be a slaughter market, the increase of imports being remarkable, especially in the past year. In 1885 the imports of cottons from England to Canada, were in November only $7,882, while last November they had grown to £18,787, an increase of over 100 per cent. For the same months the increase in importations of woollen fabrics grew from £13,530 to £17,343; of worsteds from £9,544, to £26,402. For the eleven months ending Nov. 30th we imported from Great Britain cotton piece goods to the value of £576,099 and woollen and worsted fabrics to the value of £1,212,836. The increase in the value of woollen and worsted goods in that period was over £150,000, or about $750,000. As a machine for grinding out taxes the N. P. is quite a success, but it does not seem to afford much protection to Canadian industries of the class alluded to above.

The Lindsay Post says: "One of the notable victories in redeeming the ridings was won in West Peterborough by Mr. Stratton of the EXAMINER. It was a fight between two newspaper men, and Mr. Stratton won by a fair majority. Mr. Carnegie's majority of 86 in 1883 was changed to a Reform majority of 34. We congratulate Mr. Stratton on his election, and wish him as much success as a legislator as he has achieved in journalism."

Sir Lionel Sackville West, British Minister at Washington, believes there is a favorable prospect for the resumption of negotiations at Washington looking to the renewal of the Fisheries treaty on a basis approved by the Dominion Government.

The Toronto World remarks that "leading Conservatives estimate that the Mail's course in the recent campaign cost their party about 10,000 votes. No wonder they feel discouraged."

A BAKING POWDER MATTER.

More of the Albany Newspaper Investigation.

The "Journal" Re-affirms and Emphasizes the Facts—Plain Talk from Professor Tucker—His Opinion on Ammonia and Bread Eaters Generally.

The Albany, N. Y., Journal some time since published an interesting report upon the subject of baking powders in which it gave the results of some tests of an elaborate character made for the purpose of determining the question of which is the best and wholesomest of these articles. The analyses and tests required were undertaken by Professors W. G. Tucker, of the Albany Medical College, and W. P. Mason, of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, of Troy, chemists of the highest standing and reputation, well known for their extended and valuable services as public analysts. Messrs. Tucker and Mason, the Journal stated, had been directed to procure from dealers in Albany and Troy packages of baking powder, to analyze and critically examine them, and to make their reports of facts found entirely without bias or favor.

The report proved a matter of interest and importance, and was widely copied and commented upon. From the facts presented housekeepers had no difficulty in determining for themselves the best and most wholesome baking powder to use. The Journal, its facts having been questioned by a local baking powder manufacturer, returns to the subject and publishes the following interesting interview with Prof. Tucker. The facts before stated are reaffirmed and emphasized in the most telling manner:

A Journal reporter recently visited Prof. Tucker for the purpose of gaining further information in reference to the baking powder question. He was found in the extensive laboratory of the Medical College, hard at work, but good naturedly submitted to an inquisitorial interview, the subject of which, here given, will be found of interest.

"Doctor," said the reporter, "it appears that one of our local baking powder manufacturers attempts to discredit the report some time ago published in the Journal with reference to baking powders, for which the analytical examinations were made by yourself and Prof. Mason. Were your analysis and opinion printed correctly?"

"They were," replied Prof. Tucker, "literally."

"Is there any part of the report, or of your views expressed therein, that you would modify?"

"Not a word. My examination was most carefully and accurately made; the deductions I drew from the tests were the inevitable ones, and the opinions I expressed were unquestionably correct."

"You say, Doctor, that the Royal baking powder is superior to any other baking powder which you have examined?"

"That is my report."

"Have you examined many other baking powders?"

"Quite a number."

"Wherein, Doctor, consists this superiority which you find in the Royal over other brands?"

"As stated in my report, in the great purity of its ingredients, in the unquestioned propriety and wholesomeness of these ingredients, in the exact proportions of the same, and the chemical accuracy and skill with which they have been combined. As I said before, it is, I believe, a baking powder unequaled for purity, strength and wholesomeness."

"Doctor, the Journal's lady readers would like you to inform them what are the peculiar virtues of a good baking powder over other and more old-fashioned methods of raising bread, biscuits and cake?"

"That would require a long answer something in the nature of a lecture. Briefly, however, the advantage of such a baking powder over yeast consists in the quicker work it accomplishes in the preservation of some of the best elements of the flour which are destroyed in the production of the carbonic acid gas by the use of yeast, and in the absolute certainty of sweet, light and digestible food. Over other methods for quick raising, the methods of a pure baking powder are great. It is always ready for use. The acid and alkali are combined in exact proportions to produce definite results, or to render the largest amount of leavening gas and leave nothing more than a neutral residuum, which is not the result where cream of tartar and soda are bought separately and mixed in the kitchen, for it will always occur where this is done that one or the other of these substances will predominate, making the food yellow, bitter and unwholesome. Besides, the cream of tartar which can be procured by the housekeeper is mostly adulterated, adding to the uncertainty of the result or the unwholesomeness of the food. All these difficulties are avoided in the use of a pure, properly-made baking powder."

"Will baking powders keep? How long will they hold their strength?"

"If properly made, until used. A perfect baking powder must combine superlative strength with power to retain it indefinitely. Baking powders generally are robbed of the necessary preserving agent in order to give present strength, or else have their efficiency largely destroyed by the addition of large quantities of flour to prevent premature decomposition. The method by which both these qualities are retained in the highest degree produces the perfect article, and this I believe is fully accomplished in Royal baking powder. I have seen an analyses of a baking powder which showed 21 per cent. of Rochelle salts. The baking powder was not fresh, and because of the improper manner in which it had been made the ingredients had combined, forming the purgative salt. I give this as an illustration of those baking powders whose keeping qualities are sacrificed to present strength. How to get both strength and keeping quality is the secret of baking powder success."

"Doctor, what about ammonia in baking powder?"

"Sesqui-carbonate of ammonia is sometimes used in the higher class of baking powders."

"Is it injurious or objectionable?"

"Nonsense! Quite the contrary. It has been used for generations in the finest food. It is a very volatile agent. Heat entirely evolves it into gas, leaving no residuum. Were it used in sufficient quantity to do the entire work of aeration, I am inclined to believe it would be the acme of leavening agents. Some of the highest authorities, as Hassall, recommend its exclusive use for this purpose in preference to yeast or other kinds of leaven. It is universally admitted to be a wholesome and valuable agent, and no chemist of reputation will class it otherwise. I have become indignant when I have read the silly charges that have frequently been made through ignorance or otherwise against it."

"Then those manufacturers who advertise that their powder does not contain it"—

"Confess that their powder lacks a most useful, wholesome, and excellent ingredient."

"But they say its origin is filthy?"

"Its origin and method of preparation are no more filthy than are the origin and preparation of bread. All the talk about ammonia in baking powder and its filthy origin is the veriest rubbish. A man disgraces himself when he lends himself to any such statements. It is particularly unfair for baking powder manufacturers to seek to pervert the truth, or prejudice the ignorant or unwary by statements that it is either harmful or dirty. Ammonia exists in the very air we breathe, and is largely present in nature as a wholesome substance."

The Evil Genius.

A DOMESTIC STORY.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

With that one word her anxious heart was content. She smiled; she looked out at the sea with a new appreciation of the view. "The air of this place will do me good now," she said. "Are my eyes red, Herbert? Let me go and bathe them and make myself fit to be seen."

She rang the bell. The chambermaid answered it, ready to show the other rooms. She turned round at the door.

"Let's try to make our sitting-room look like home," she suggested. "How dismal, how cheerlessly like a thing that doesn't belong to us the empty table looks! Put some of your books and my keepsakes on it while I am away. I'll bring my work with me when I come back."

He had left his traveler's bag on a chair when he first came in. Now that he was alone, and under no restraint, he sighed as he unlocked the bag. "Home?" he repeated; "we have no home. Poor girl! poor unhappy girl! Let me help her to deceive herself."

He opened the bag. The little fragile presents which she called her "keepsakes" had been placed by her own hands in the upper part of the bag, so that the books should not weigh on them, and had been carefully protected by wrappings of cotton wool. Taking them out, one by one, Herbert found a delicate china candlestick (intended to hold a wax-taper) broken into two pieces, in spite of the care that had been taken to preserve it. Of not great value in itself, old associations made the candlestick precious to Sydney. It had been broken at the stem and could be easily mended so as to keep the accident concealed. Consulting the waiter, Herbert discovered that the fracture could be repaired at the nearest town, and that the place would be within reach when he went out for a walk. In fear of another disaster if he put it back in the bag he opened a drawer in the table and laid the two fragments carefully inside at the farther end. In doing this his hand touched something that had been already placed in the drawer. He drew it out and found that it was a book—the same book that Mrs. Presty (surely the evil genius of the family again) had hidden from Randal's notice and had been forgotten when she left the hotel.

Herbert instantly recognised the gilding on the cover, imitated from a design invented by himself. He remembered the inscription, and yet he read it again:

"To dear Catherine from Herbert, on the anniversary of our marriage."

The book dropped from his hand on the table as if it had been a new pain.

His wife (he persisted in thinking of her as his wife) must have occupied the room-night perhaps have been the person whom he had succeeded as a guest at the hotel. Did she still value his present to her in remembrance of old times? No! She valued it so little that she had evidently forgotten it. Perhaps her maid might have included it among the small articles of luggage. Perhaps dear little Kitty might have put it into one of her mother's trunks. In any case, there it was, abandoned in the drawer of a table at an hotel.

"Oh," he thought bitterly, "if I could only feel as coldly towards Catherine as she feels towards me!" His resolution had resisted much; but this final trial of his self-control was more than he could sustain. He dropped into a chair—his pride of manhood recoiled from the contemptible weakness of crying—he tried to remember that she had divorced him and taken his child from him. In vain! In vain! He burst into tears.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

With a heart lightened beyond reconciliation (not the first reconciliation unhappily), with hopes revived, and sweet content restored, Sydney's serenity of mind was not quite unruffled. Her thoughts were not dwelling on the evil life which she had honestly deplored or on the wronged wife to whom she had been eager to make atonement. Where is the woman whose sorrows are not thrown into the shade by the bright renewal of love? The one anxiety that troubled Sydney was caused by the remembrance of a letter which she had sent to the convent at Sandyseal.

As her better mind now viewed it, she had doubly injured Herbert—first in distrusting him; then by appealing from him to the compassion of strangers.

If the reply for which she had rashly asked was waiting for her at that moment—if the mercy of the mother superior was ready to comfort and guide her—what return could she make? How could she excuse herself from accepting what was offered in kindly reply to her own petition? She had pleased herself, for all she knew to the contrary, between two alternatives of ingratitude equally unendurable, equally degrading. To feel this was to find the suspense which, in persons of excitable temperament, is of all trials the hardest to bear. The chambermaid was still in the room. Sydney asked if the post-office was near the hotel.

The woman smiled. "Everything is near us, ma'am, in this little place. Can we send to the postoffice for you?"

Sydney wrote her initials. "Ask, if you please, for a letter addressed in that way." She handed the memorandum to the chambermaid. "Corresponding with her lover under her husband's nose!" That was how the chambermaid explained it below stairs when the porter remarked that initials looked mysterious.

The mother superior had replied. Sydney trembled as she opened the letter. It began kindly.

"I believe you, my child, and I am anxious to help you. But I cannot correspond with an unknown person. If you decide to reveal yourself it is only right to add that I have shown your letter to the reverend father who, in temporal as in spiritual things, is our counselor and guide. To him I must refer you in the first instance. His wisdom will decide the serious question of receiving you into our holy church and will discover, in due time, if you have a true vocation to a religious life. With the father's sanction, you may be sure of my affectionate desire to serve you."

Sydney put the letter back in the envelope, feeling grateful toward the mother superior, but determined by the conditions imposed on her to make no further advance toward the Benedictine community.

Even if her motive in writing to the convent had gratified undiscerned, the situation to the priest would still have decided her on taking this step. The faint idea of opening her inmost heart and telling her saddest secrets to a man, and that man a stranger, who had, repeatedly to be [illegible]. In a overflow of reply, gratuitous and respectful, [illegible] inexplicably moving surprised, [illegible]

The letter having been stamped and posted in the hotel box, she returned to the sitting-room, free from the one doubt that had troubled her, eager to show Herbert how truly she believed in him, how hopefully she looked to the future.

With a happy smile on her lips she opened the door. She was on the point of asking him playfully if he had felt surprised at her long absence—when the sight that met her eyes turned her cold with terror in an instant.

His arms were stretched out on the table; his head was laid on them; despair confessed itself in his attitude; grief spoke in the deep sobbing breaths that shook him. Love and compassion restored Sydney's courage; she advanced to raise him in her arms—and stopped once more. The book on the table caught her eye. He was still unconscious of her presence: she ventured to open it. She read the inscription—looked at him—looked back at the writing—and knew the truth at last.

The rigor of the torture that she suffered paralyzed all outward expression of pain. Quietly she put the book back on the table. Quietly she touched him and called him by his name.

He started and looked up; he made an attempt to speak to her in his customary tone. "I didn't hear you come in," he said.

She pointed to the book without the slightest change in her face or her manner.

"I have read the inscription to your wife," she answered; "I have seen you while you thought you were alone; the mercy which has so long kept the truth from me is mercy wasted now. Your bonds are broken, Herbert. You are a free man."

He affected not to have understood her. She let him try to persuade her of it, and made no reply. He declared, honestly declared, that what she had said distressed him. She listened in submissive silence. He took her hand and kissed it. She let him kiss it, and let him drop it at her side. She frightened him; he began to fear for her reason. There was silence—long, horrid, hopeless silence.

She had left the door of the room open. One of the servants of the hotel appeared outside in the passage. He spoke to some person behind him. "Perhaps the book has been left in here," he suggested. A gentle voice answered: "I hope the lady and gentleman will excuse me if I ask leave to look for my book." She stepped into the room to make her apologies.

Herbert Linley and Sydney Westerfield looked at the woman whom they had outraged. The woman whom they had outraged paused, and looked back at them.

"Better die soon, Than live on lingeringly in pain." Better be neither, but get and take medicine that will relieve pain which is only an evidence of disease, and thus you may live on in health and happiness. If you have a cold or cough, weak or sore lungs, consumption, chronic nasal catarrh, bronchitis, impure blood or liver disease, take Dr. Pierces "Golden Medical Discovery" a certain cure for these diseases. What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eodw41tf

Obituary.

Last night Mr. John E. Hammond died of typhoid fever at his residence, "Ashleigh," Smith street, in the 35th year of his age. Deceased was the eldest son of the late Squire Hammond, of Ashleigh Hall, Sussex county, England, and with his brother, Herbert (now recovering from an attack of typhoid fever), came to this country in 1869, first purchasing the Davidson farm in Smith township, where they lived till his removal to town several years later. A few weeks ago his brother, Herbert, was taken ill, and deceased was unremitting in his attentions. Last Wednesday he was well and hearty, and it is surmised that he contracted the fatal disease during Herbert's illness. Dr. Boucher attended both sufferers. Deceased was a warm supporter of all field sports, and possessed the form and vigor of an athlete. He was, until lately, a member of Peterborough troop of cavalry. He leaves a widow, (Harriet, daughter of the late Lieutenant-General John Macdonald) and two young sons to mourn his loss. The funeral will take place Wednesday, at 2.30 p.m.

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles have, perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10c. remain at the same size. eodw41

Harper's Young People.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

Harper's Young People has been called "the model of what a pictorial for young readers ought to be," and the justice of this commendation is amply sustained by the large circulation it has attained both at home and in Great Britain. This success has been reached by methods that must commend themselves to the judgment of parents no less than to the tastes of children—namely, by an earnest and well-sustained effort to provide the best and most attractive reading for young people at a low price. The illustrations are copious and of a corresponding high standard of excellence.

An epitome of everything that is attractive and desirable in juvenile literature.—Boston Courier.

A weekly feast of good things to the boys and girls in every family which it visits.—Brooklyn Union.

It is wonderful in its wealth of pictures information, and interest.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.
